SANCTIFICATION
The Experience and the Ethics

FOREWORD
This little volume is published not because the world needs more books, but because we think it is an endeavor to answer some unchallengeable and sincere objections to the experience of sanctification. It is written with a sincere desire to aid those who are seeking a pure heart, and are trying to live a life consistent with their testimony.

What is to follow is not an apology for the doctrine of holiness nor for those who claim such experience. No apology is necessary. The doctrine of the Bible need no defense.

There is a deep conviction in the heart of the writer that proper distinction has not been made between the experience of holiness and the ethics of holiness in the preaching and writing on this subject. This is why we have ventured to publish this book.

The experience and the ethics of holiness are two different things, and it is the ethics which is the greatest achievement. This little book is an endeavor to express in a small way the beauty and passion of the writer's soul to live and love in holiness.

Beautifull bound in cloth bound covers; gold title. Large frontispiece picture of author.

COMMENDATION
I have read Dr. R. T. Williams' book entitled "SANCTIFICATION, THE EXPERIENCE AND ETHICS," with great interest. It is a volume of great merit. The statements are clear, forceful and sustained with facts, logic and scripture. The book is clear in its argument on the experience of sanctification, and greatly clarifies and defines the experience by its treatment of its ethical aspect.

THREE INDISPENSABLES TO THE PREACHER'S SUCCESS

Here are three things which enter into the success of every preacher—otherwise his success is not success. These three things are sincerity, earnestness and genuine grace.

There are certain forces and factors in the making of every preacher which are personal to him, but the three we have mentioned must be present in all.

Our tendency is to point out the personal, individual qualities and tithe of these as essential. Take a preacher like Bud Robinson: we have observed that he had few formal school advantages in his youth, and so we are likely to think that he has succeeded because he is not trained by the schools. But this will not do, for John Wesley also succeeded and he was trained by the schools. We observe that Bud Robinson speaks with a lip, and we are likely to think that he has won thousands to Christ because of this lip. But this is not conclusive. Whitefield won his thousands to the Lord and he was an orator of first rank. And thus we might go on through the list of personal, individual characteristics of Bud Robinson or any other successful preacher of the gospel.

But no man who has simply assumed to be a preacher and has taken upon himself the work as a profession, or who has lost his former clear, white ambition to please God and be His prophet among the people can really succeed. It would be a good thing for every preacher, young and old, to take himself aside now and then and examine his motives. Let him ask himself such questions as these: Why did I enter the ministry at the beginning? Why do I continue to devote myself to this work? How much of my interest is mercenary and how much of it unselfish? How much of mere regard for reputation enters into my clinging to the ministry as a calling? What per cent of my fear is godly fear and what per cent of it is merely human, tormenting fear?

And on the point of earnestness: How few can really produce proof that they desire to succeed as preachers and are looking forward to do so? And if they have done their share? Some confine their efforts altogether to the duties they are hired to do, and are scrupulously careful not to go beyond. Some are apparently serious and actually engaged in "ministerial duties," but show surprising lightness and indiffrerence at all other times. They make every effort to "put over" an altar service, but seldom engage in informal religious conversations with such as God permits to cross their ways. How different it was with Wesley and Finney and Moody and others who made it their business to win souls "in season and out of season"?

These good men were winning souls all the time and everywhere. A business or social engagement was to them an opportunity to win a soul. The passing meeting with a stranger in the course of travel was a chance to speak of Christ. These men were absorbingly in earnest all the time.

Of course it is a delicate thing to speak of the preacher's personal religious experience. His business is to teach and disseminate religion and if he has but little grace on hand he will the sooner resent the intimation that such is the case. Nevertheless, hundreds have entered the calling of the ministry who have never been changed by the vital power of the grace of God, and hundreds of others have openly backslidden while serving the altar. And between these extremes are multitudes of preachers who would be forced to join Sam Jones in the testimony that he had possessed only "a log cabin experience for ten years." In other words, just because a man is a preacher is no reason why the devil should leave him entirely alone, and being a preacher does not

I have read Dr. B. T. Williams' book entitled "SANCTIFICATION. THE EXPERIENCE AND ETHICS" with great interest. It is a volume of great merit. The statements are clear, forcible and well substantiated, with facts, logic and scripture. He is in his position on the experience of sanctification, and properly states and defends the experience by his treatment of its ethics. He thus fills a great need in holiness literature which has long been felt by many. This book will be a wide sale, and should be in every home. It is truly a classic among us.

Some confine their efforts altogether to the duties they are hired to do, and are scrupulously careful not to go beyond. Some are apparently serious when actually engaged in "ministerial duties," but show surprising lightness and indifference at all other times. They make every effort to "put over" an altar service, but seldom engage in informal religious conversation with such as God permits to cross their ways. HE HOLDS THE KEY

After all is said, the preacher holds the key to the situation in the average church. If there is lack of spiritual results, the preacher must shoulder the responsibility; if there is indifference and lukewarmness, such a condition can be traced to the preacher; if there is lack of unity, and disharmony is prevalent, trace the source to the preacher; if the church is lifeless and lethargic, in all probability the preacher has the same symptoms. A strong preacher, a strong church; a wideawake preacher, a wideawake church; a spiritual preacher, a spiritual church; a preacher with a burden for the unsaved, a church with more or less burden. How great are the responsibilities of the preacher! C. E. C.

CHARLES H. GABRIEL

One of the most prominent gospel song writers of recent years is Charles H. Gabriel who has been recognized as a gifted and brilliant composer. His songs have blessed and inspired thousands in all civilized lands. Among them are the following popular hymns: “The Glory Song,” “He Lived Me,” “Hail Emmanuel,” “The Way of the Cross,” “He Is So Precious To Me.” His song “Higher Ground” is a universal favorite with holiness people.

September is the month when the children go back to school and the young people “go off” to college. It is also the month which contains the only holiday celebrated in honor of labor. It is the time when clerks and office people are returning from vacation. It is the month which marks the resuming of the best program for the Sunday school. It is the month when the prayer-meeting attendance should be increased because of the return of moderate temperature. September is really an episcopal month. Let every preacher plan to take full advantage of its opportunities for promoting the work of God.

It would be a good thing for the live preacher to get in touch with his denominational publishing house and make arrangements to have sent to him every book which appears from time to time which might be of interest to preachers. The cost of such an arrangement would not be prohibitive and it would certainly keep the preacher supplied with splendid reading matter.

THE CURRENT REVIVAL OF ANCIENT ERRORS

By Basil W. Miller

No. IV. The Reappearance of Semi-Antinomianism

The Antinomian Controversy, which was destined to have a tremendous power in shaping later theological views, had its origin with John Agricola of Elsleben, who was for a time professor in the University of Wittenberg. He was a contemporary of Luther. It was in 1537 that Agricola maintained his famous disputation, his view against the law, which was controverted by Luther, and Melancthon. The term Antinomianism, was derived from two Greek words, αὐθ, against, νόμος, law, and was so named by Luther. Antinomianism is the doctrine that all Christians are freed from the obligation to keep the law of God, and especially the decalogue. It holds that faith in Jesus Christ dispenses with and renders unnecessary, the observance of morality and the performance of good works for the final perseverance of the saint. This dispute, though not named Antinomian until the time of the Reformation, had its roots in the endless argument as to whether salvation is of works or is of faith. It was preshadowed by some of the writings of Augustine, and must always be a portion of any system, Calvinistic or otherwise, which affirms that the saints who are elected to salvation are destined to finally persevere.

This controversy proper was terminated by an action of Agricola by which he retracted his views, and during the Commonwealth in England Parliament in 1648 decreed that such was erroneous, and those who held these views should be imprisoned. Though this action in no way eliminated the position of High Calvinism as to this point.

Agricola rested his view upon a misinterpretation of Romans 6:14: “ye are not under law, but under grace.” Amosol in 1559 went a step farther than his teacher and declared that “good works are hurtful to salvation.” Melancthon rightly replied in that classic Latin phrase, “Sola fides justificat, sed fides non est sola” (“Faith alone justifies, but not the faith that is alone.”) Agricola waged a warm battle against Moses and went so far as to affirm that Moses ought to be hanged! As Strong, the peckish Calvinistic theologian states, “This is sanctification without perseverance.” The colored preacher well stated the Antinomian view thus, “You may sin and fall. You may even and sway. But you’re just as sure of heaven, as if you’d done done deyay.”

It is well to note the elements of this erroneous view of that during the present age in so many forms it appears. It was this theological background which hid the roots for all theories which deny the possibility of sanctification as a complete work of eradication.

On the other hand this theory is wrapped up with the doctrine of the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, for without this there could be no righteousness even by the act of faith irrespective of any deeds of later morality. It also affirms that in the view of the theology of the Reformation, both Lutheran and Reformed and later Calvinism, that the Christian’s complete justification and his final sanctification is the result of the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, when once the believer—If elected (for it is hard to separate Antinomianism in any form from Calvinism)—exercises saving faith. The three following texts are the essential biblical foundation of this dogma: “Ye are complete in Him” (Col. 2:10). “By one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified” (Heb. 10:14). “Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness and sanctification and redemption” (1 Cor. 1:30). Antinomianism affirms that this imputed righteousness of Christ is ours irrespective of any moral righteousness on our part. Sin we may, but still this imputed righteousness is made unto us sanctification and redemption.

The pursuit of an independent perfection, of any form of morality, is thus regarded as a needless action, and oftentimes is an utter impossibility. This makes the action of Christ complete in denying or negating both the condemnation and the demands of the law over us.

To state this doctrine is within itself sufficient to condemn it, or to answer its arguments. In the first place it must place the law in a position inferior to Christ, who is one individual. Against the righteousness of Christ, the law as an entity separate and with power over mankind is set. It likewise makes righteousness to be separated from the moral actions of mankind, depending entirely upon the action of Christ, and the imputation of His righteousness to the believer; while morality in the strictest sense is properly conceived as the relation of one to the perfect moral law of holiness which God sets as His moral government. Then it denies the possibility of a man's sins separating or dividing him from this position of adoption. It makes redemption an act eternal, without the possibility of being broken or changed. It also declares that the stamp of the image of Christ on the soul cannot be erased forever. We shall discuss this view later in our review of the present reappearance of Calvinistic tendencies, and shall not deal extensively with it at this juncture. It breaks the connection between morality and faith in Christ's saving power; while in reality, it is morality, after the act of saving faith in appropriating the benefits of the moral and spiritual, maintains or breaks this status as a truly regenerated individual. Without morality, or a constant living up to the moral law of holiness, regeneration loses its efficacy in the human heart. God has declared Himself as a being infinite in holiness, and as demanding holiness of His subjects, and if this Antinomian theory be correct then God does not require holiness of His children.

The Antinomianism of the present carries the implication of the impossibility of living according to the law of holiness or purity in the sight of God, and thus negates the direct commands of God to live holy. For it affirms the law of holiness, or God's law, is too high a standard for the believer to maintain, and the only law in which the law as so elevated is by the imputation of the righteousness of Christ to the believer which frees him from the demands of this law of holiness.

Another outgrowth of Semi-Antinomism is the fact that it places the sanction of God upon sin and impurity. For while one is believed to be of the elect, with the imputed righteousness of Christ his claim of righteousness and his freedom from the law of God, he is thus free to commit sins of any degree or character; for this will in no manner change his status as a follower of the Lord and a recipient of His righteousness.

We have stated the nature of Antinomianism, and briefly outlined its implications, let us now turn to its occurrence at the present time. In some sections there is a firm denial of the necessity of a knowledge of the historical development of theology, and there is a gradual turning away from a systematic branch of knowledge, but the result is that many of these ancient errors are gripping the present Church with their heretical elements and the ministry and laity are sanctioning them.

In the first place, let us note the outworkings of this doctrine on practical theology or pulpit dogmatics. There is a common tendency on every hand to hear ministers affirm that it is impossible for one to live holy, by this meaning that it is not possible for one to live without sin while in the flesh. Affirming as they do that sin resides in the flesh, and that the carnal mind has power which the Spirit is unable to redeem one from, they make righteousness a matter of the imputation of that of Christ to the believer. This theory is found in those denominations which gladly quote that text, and that wrongly, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." It is well to note in this connection to whom this scripture, when rightly quoted, is applied. The writer is speaking of sinners, and not of the converted, or the elect. It is also discovered in those pulpits and works which magnify the beauty of righteousness but which affirm that this righteousness is a matter attainable only after death. True it is that such dogmas have their roots in Neo-Calvinism—which is a revival of the High Calvinism of the past three centuries—with the necessity of supporting their doctrine of the final apostasy of the unrighteous, and of the full perseverance of the saints; but it also is found at present among those of Wesleyan or Arminian tenets of faith. This is due to the fact that whereas Wesleyanism demands sanctification as a definite work of grace in eradicating carnality from the soul, they are unwilling to admit the necessity of sanctification, and even to postulate its impossibility in this life. There is thus developed a form of divorce between righteousness or morality and personal purity.

There is no escaping the fact, that the moral law of Christ demands the highest standard of purity, and this purity Wesley affirmed was attainable only through the action of the Holy Spirit on the heart of the believer subsequent to regeneration whereby the soul is made perfect in love, or made holy. It is this denial of the possibility of sanctification as a second definitive work of divine grace that forms the greatest basis of modern Semi-Antinomianism. In the theologies of those who are true to Calvinistic teachings, and those who have drifted from the dispensational views interpreted by Wesley, this recrudescence is found. Strong representatives of the outstanding Calvinistic theologies of the recent age, whose Systematic Theology can be studied by the research worker in this field, in refusing what he terms "erroneous views of sanctification," after giving a firm refutation of the Antinomian view thus sums up the argument, "Christ does not free us from the law as a rule of life, But He does free us (1) from the law as a system of curse and penalty; this he does by bringing the curse and the penalty upon Himself, Christ frees us (2) from the law with its claims as a method of salvation; this He does by making His obedience and merits ours, Christ frees us (3) from the law as an outward and foreign compulsion." (Theology, p. 876.) Then he goes on the other hand a form of Semi-Antinomianism which his refutation of the views of sanctification, as he terms, of the Perfectionist—by which he means those who hold the views of Wesley and Finney. He affirms that this view rests upon a false interpretation of the law; that it finds no support in the Scriptures but rather it is contradicted by them. Herein he asserts that in no place do the Scriptures teach that one may live without sin. This is supported by an erroneous misrepresentation of the context and the meaning of certain Bible passages, for instance, 1 John 1:8.

Mark well the fact: whenever any writer or speaker of the present age affirms the impossibility of sanctification, or the action of the Spirit on the soul of man whereby he is cleansed of sin and made holy, that to do so is necessary either to misrepresent the doctrine of the New Testament, in supporting his position, or to deny the validity of those passages that plainly teach the possibility of holiness as attainable in this life, or he affirms directly that it is possible to maintain the favor of God, the regenerating power of the Spirit, and at the same time to live in sin. If this be true then there is no distinction between saints and sinners on the moral score, with reference to the moral law. For a sinner breaks the moral law, and this brings upon him the condemnation of God; and a saint in so breaking the moral law, must likewise not remain a child of God, but become a sinner by this action of immorality whereby the moral law is destroyed, and thus he loses his position or status as a regenerated soul.

In the second place there is a higher form of Semi-Antinomianism, which sets aside the moral law, in what we might term the modern Newkirk movements, as also in our better known movements termed "The Victorian Life Movement." Back to each is the affirmation that it is impossible for sin to be cleansed from the soul, but that victory comes through a form of the suppression of carnality, by added grace from the Spirit. True it is that this movement rightly affirms the existence of depravity, the necessity of living in accordance with the moral law of purity, but it denies the possibility of having the sin principle so eradicated that one can live a life of purity and holiness. This possibly is the most subtle form of Antinomianism that is sweeping the present century. Such doctrines are strong in emphasizing the victorious side of the Christian life, ofttimes the seeking of the power of the Spirit in sustaining grace within the soul; but they deny that mere vital action of the Holy Spirit in enabling the believer to be enabled to live according to the moral law, a life of holiness. Along this line one must say a word concerning the "modern tongues movement," which though it definitely affirms the necessity of the baptism of the Spirit, witnesses to by the speaking in an unknown tongue (1 Cor. 14:19, 2) or as it were the speaking in the article on Mysticism, but at the same time it denies the fact of the cleansing of this baptism from the taint of sin, or carnality. And thus it makes way for a divorce of righteousness and morality, affirming that one is righteous when he is accepted through saving faith as a child of God, and at the same time failing to emphasize the strong necessity of living up to the moral law of holiness.

There is power for victorious living in the baptism of the Spirit, but this power is first due—to the cleansing of the Spirit's action on the soul, whereby one is able to live in accordance to the law of God.

In the third place Semi-Antinomianism is discovered in the existence of those cults which specialize in one truth to the utter disregard of all others, and in a lack of emphasis upon the true teaching of the Bible—the maintenance of of heart cleansing, which by a full consecration of the soul by the believer to the will of God, and by faith in Christ is received through the efficacious working of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, the active agency in cleansing the soul; and that through this cleansing process of sanctification the sin nature, or principle, carnality or depravity, is eradicated from the soul; that after this status of divine grace becomes a reality and the sanctified person is cleansed from sin, there is the possibility of falling from grace through sin, and through a breaking of the moral law of holiness, as demanded by God.

DEVOTIONAL

PASTORAL THEOLOGY

By A. M. Hills

Chapter 5. Public Prayer

PRAYER is both a blessed privilege and a solemn obligation. Foremost among all duties is the duty of prayer and worship. Prayer is the communion of the creature with the Creator.

Prayer is not a custom invented by man. It was taught us by God. Deu regard for Him as our Father in heaven, and the Author of our being must show itself in expressions of devotion and regard, in acknowledgment of benefits received, in confession of shortcomings and sins, in seeking guidance and help and blessings.

Prayer is natural because God made man dependent, needing His help and guidance, and access to Himself. Prayer is instructive, a universal expression of human nature. All tribes and races pray, and have always done so. Moreover, prayer is scriptural, of divine origin, and everywhere encouraged in the Word of God.

I. There is a marked difference between private and public prayer. In private prayer an individual soul is talking to God about his own personal needs or weaknesses or temptations or sins, about which others may not be directly concerned. He then says, "I," "My," "Me." "Bless the Lord, O my soul." "Bless out my transgressions." "Be merciful to me, O Lord." He is seeking to make God know, to express his needs or to do penance for sins.

2. Again Jesus said, "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. (Matthew 6:7). I have mentioned this before, but the Master's words will bear repeating on a matter so serious. Even good people can fall into pernicious habits in public prayer which are alike displeasing to God and distressing... to men. The memory of a dear young man comes to my mind, who, in public prayer, would repeat four or five names of Deity in a single short sentence, and then do it again, and again, on and on, using names of Deity a hundred times in a single prayer! There are people, not a few who will refuse to attend the sanctuary, rather than endure such an infliction.

Other thoughtless ministers will repeat one name of God in endless iteration fifty or seventy-five times, until it is distressing to hear. Still others' will offer prayers to the father, the son, and Holy Ghost; "this morning" twenty-five or thirty times, as if they were trying to impress upon the mind of God what time of day it was. These are unfortunate habits of His own disciples which Jesus was teaching us to avoid. By all means, let us do it, for His sake, as well as for our own.

We may remark here that with all the mistakes that men may make, yet unwritten prayer is the most scriptural and the most excellent form of public supplication. It is ours to prove the superiority of extempore prayer by making it more spiritual and earnest than liturgical devotion. All our faculties should be called into exercise, and the soul be elevated to noblest action while in public prayer—the Holy Spirit exalting the mind and directing the petition to be in harmony with the mind of God. But a heartless, unfeeling, indifferent prayer is an abomination in His sight. Only habitual, earnest, communion with God can preserve that becoming fervency that should characterize all devotion and worship.

Yet with all these criticisms and warnings it is well to remember that Jesus also said, "Men ought always to pray and not to faint." Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened:

And of which of you that is a father, shall he send his son a loaf, and he give him a stone? or if he shall ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" (Luke 11:9-13, R. V.). In other words, Jesus kindly said, "But however poor your grammar, or however lugubrious and unharmonious your speech, keep on praying; for God can hear and understand and bless."

III. But still we can take lessons from Christ and His saints and avoid needless bungling and ineffectiveness. Spurgeon was one of God's pulpit giants, whose public prayers wonderfully blessed one of the largest congregations that ever gathered under one man's ministry. I shall make free use of what he taught his students on "Public Prayer."

1. He says, "Our prayers must never grovel; they must soar and mount. We need a heavenly frame of mind. Our addresses to the throne of grace must be solemn and humble, not chippent and humbleness. The colloquial form of speech is out of place before the Lord; we must bow reverently and with deepest awe.

We may pray boldly with God, but still He is in heaven, and we are upon earth, and we are to avoid presumption. In supplication we are peculiarly before the throne of the Infinite; we are talking with God rather than seeking the edification of our fellow-men. Therefore, we must put our shoes from off our feet, for the place whereon we stand is holy ground."

2. "Let the Lord alone be the object of your prayers. Beware of having an eye to the auditor; beware of becoming rhetorical to please the listeners. Prayer must not be transformed into 'an oblique sermon.' It is little short of blasphemy to make devotion an occasion for display. Fine dry prayers are useless, and the presence of the Lord of hosts it ill becomes a sinner the feathers and finery of tawdry speech with the view of winning applause from his fellow-mortals. Hypocrites who dare do this have their reward, but it is one to be 'thralled.' A heavy sentence of condemnation was passed upon a minister when it was flatteringly said that his prayer was the most eloquent ever offered to a Boston congregation. We may aim at exciting yearnings and aspirations, of those who bear us in prayer; but every word and thought must be Godward. Remember the people in your prayers, but do not mold your supplications to win their esteem; look up, look up with both eyes.

3. Avoid all vulgarity in prayer. Spurgeon said, "We seldom now meet with the vulgarity of prayer which were so common in Metho- odist prayer-meetings. Uneducated people must, when in earnest, pray in their own way, and their language will frequently shock the fastidious if not the devout; but for this allowance must be made, and if the spirit is evidently sincere we may forgive uncomely expressions. I once, at a prayer-meeting, heard a poor man pray thus, 'Lord, watch over these young people during the feast time, for Thou knowest, Lord, how their enemies watch for them as a cat watches for mice.' Some ridiculed the expression, but it appears to me to be natural and expressive, considering the person using it. A little gentle instruction and a hint or two will usually prevent a repetition of anything objectionable in such cases; but we who occupy the pulpit must be careful to be judicious in the use of words. Jacob Gruber, an American Methodist preacher, after having listened to a young, Calvinistic minister violently attacking his creed, was asked to conclude with prayer. He prayed that the Lord would bless the young man who had been preaching, and grant him much grace that his heart might become as soft as his head.' To say nothing of the bad taste of such public animadversion upon a fellow-minister, every right-minded man will see that the throne of the Most High is not the place for uttering such vituperation. Most probably the young orator deserved a castigation; but the older one sinned ten times more by his want of reverence in prayer.

4. "Another fault equally to be avoided is an unshaken super-abundance of end- dancing words. 'O Lord! and sweet Lord!' come over and over again as vain repetitions, they are among the worst of blots. The word 'dear' has come from daily use to be so common, and so small, and in some cases so silly and affected a monosyllable; that interlarding one's prayers with it is not to edification.

5. 'Avoid that kind of prayer which may be called a sort of peremptory demanding of God, as if we could command and exact blessings from the Lord of all. Remember, it is still a man, wrestling, even though permitted to wrestle with the eternal I Am. We are taught to say, 'Our Father,' but it is still 'Our Father who art in heaven!' Never fall into a vain-gloryous style of impermitent address to God; He is not to be insulted as an antagonist, but entreated with as our Lord and God, in a humble and lowly spirit.

6. 'Pray when you are professed to pray, and don't talk about it. Disquisitions in prayer about our need of help are not prayer. Why do not men go at once to prayer? In downright earnestness address yourself to intercession, and set your face toward the Lord. Plead for the supply of the great and constant needs of the church, and do not fail to urge, with devout fervor, the special requirements of the present time and audience.

Let the sick, the poor, the dying, the heathen, the Jew, and all forgotten classes of people, be mentioned as they press upon your heart. Pray for your people as saints and sinners. Mention the young and the aged; the impressed and the careless, the devout and the backslider. Never turn to the right hand or left; move on and on, in real prayer. Pray as one who has tried and proved God, and therefore comes with undoubting confidence to renew his pleadings."

7. "As a rule, if called upon to preach, offer the prayer yourself. If you should be highly esteemed in the ministry, make a point, with great courtesy, but equal firmness, to resist the practice of choosing men to pray with the idea of honoring them by giving them something to do. Our public devotions should never be degraded into opportunities of complaint. I endeavor invariably to take all the service myself for my own sake, and I think also for the people. I do not believe that 'anybody' will do for the praying. No, sir, the prayer is one of the most useful, weighty and important parts of the service, and ought to be even more considered than the sermon. There must be no putting up of anybodies and nobodies to pray, and then the selection of the ablest man to preach. If you do delegate this part of the service to another on account of your own sickness or feebleness, let it be to one in whose spirituality and preparedness you have the fullest confidence. Appoint the ablest man to pray; and let the sermon be spurred sooner than the approach to heaven. If I am able to do both, and I may have my choice, I will sooner yield up the sermon than the prayer, and seek of the Lord for the gifts and graces necessary to its right discharge."

8. "In order to make our public prayer what it should be, the first necessity is that it should be a matter of the heart. A man must be really in earnest in supplication. It must be true prayer, and if it be such, it will, like love, cover a multitude of sins. You can pardon weaknesses and faults and limitations, when you clearly see that the man's inmost heart is speaking to his Maker. If ever your whole manhood was engaged in anything, let it be in drawing near to God in public. So pray, that by a divi- ne attraction you draw the whole congregation with you to the throne of God. So pray that by the power of the Holy Spirit resting on you, you express the desires and thoughts of every- one present, and stand as the one voice for the hundred of beating hearts which are glowing with fervor before the throne of God."
9. "Have variety in prayer. Vary the length of prayers, and the subject of your prayers in intercession. There are many topics which may burden your heart; the church, in its weakness, its backslidings, its sorrows, and its comforts; the outside world, the neighborhood, the unconverted hearers, the nation, the heathen world. Pray in the Spirit, and as He may guide in your devotions. As you would avoid a viper, keep from all attempts to work up spurious fervor in public devotion. Do not labor to seem to be earnest.

Pray as your heart dictates under the leading of the Spirit, and do not imitate others. Just be natural in it all, asking the wisdom and guidance and inspiration of the Holy Ghost.

"Let there be meditation and preparation of the mind and heart in private devotion before the public service begins. This is certainly wiser and better than to rush into the august presence of the Almighty without any definite petition or desire or longing. "O Lord, teach us how to pray!"

Books About the Bible
"In the past few years we have rejoiced in the almost numberless books that have been written about the Bible. These books have concerned themselves with the history of the Bible, the interpretation of the Bible, the characters of the Bible, and the inspiration that comes from reading the Bible. We sound a note of warning, however. Good as these books are, it is quite impossible for them to take the place of the Bible itself. Let us beware of reading too much about the Bible and too little the Bible."

Blood and Oil
It took very great courage on the part of Mr. George Horton to write his recently published book, "The Blight of Asia," in which he tells the unvarnished truth about the destruction of Smyrna. Says James W. Gerard, former United States ambassador to Germany, in the foreword to this volume:

"That it should have been possible twenty centuries after the birth of Christ for a small and backward nation, like the Turks, to have committed such crimes against civilization and the progress of the world is a matter which should cause all conscientious people to pause and think; yet the writer shows conclusively that these crimes have been committed without opposition on the part of any Christian nation, and that the last frightful scene at Smyrna was enacted within a few yards of a powerful Allied and American battle fleet."

"We turned a deaf ear to the dying Christians when they called to us for aid, fully aware that America was their only hope, and now it would appear that there is a growing tendency in this country to whitewash the Turks and condone their crimes in order to obtain material advantages from them."

The Snare of Shallowness
"Dr. W. L. Watkinson declares that those who build their houses on the sand consult appearance rather than reality, speed rather than thoroughness, and ease rather than security."

An Exceptional City
"Montreal, Canada, is a city with a population of more than a million. There are no theaters, or movies open on Sunday, and no Sunday papers published."

HINTS TO FISHERMEN
By C. E. Cornell

Gamblers Lose Heavily
Men become obsessed by the gambling habit. They usually gamble until they lose all they possess.

Figures recently completed show that the gamblers of the world lost 154,000,000 francs at Monte Carlo last year. This is not a record, for the losses of 1926 were 7,000,000 francs greater.

Gamblers flock to Monte Carlo from every part of the known world. Casino shares have a par value of 100 francs each, but annual dividends of 72 francs. They sell for as high as 11,000 francs each. Dividends are not paid either until after a generous amount is deducted for keeping up and improving the beautiful grounds and buildings.

Remember Lot's Wife
The Pathfinder says, "Mrs. Lot being a woman was naturally curious and she looked back. For that she was punished most severely. She was turned into a pillar of salt, according to record. For hundreds of years the inhabitants of the country around the Dead Sea, where the ancient Sodom and Gomorrah were located, have pointed out a particular pillar of salt which they claim is the remains of Lot's wife. Many curious superstitions have grown up about this pillar. According to one belief, which has been perpetuated by guides in the Holy Land, if any part of this pillar is removed, it will immediately be replaced by some miraculous process. Recently it was announced that the pillar of salt has disappeared. It stood in the way of commercial development on the shores of the Dead Sea."

Sir Hall Caine and the Bible
"I have walked on-ridden again and again over every foot He trod, as far as I know, in the land He lived in, and during those thirty-four years I have (I say very humbly) accumulated as many of the material facts of His life on earth as anybody, as far as I can judge, seems to have possessed; but, lest this might lead me to be a vain saying, let me add that I am still far removed from the end of the road of the deathless Book that tells His story. I know any more than my old mother knew, who in simple faith lived and died by it."

..." writes Sir Hall Caine in the Methodist Leader.
Lord Hugh Cecil on Topical Sermons

"It is for the ministry to instruct us in brotherly love—I hope they do, and in the principles of Christian ethics; but the application of those principles belongs to the person who knows all the circumstances. When Sir Austen Chamberlain was at Lausanne we hoped he applied the Christian principles to international relations, but I don't know enough about it to say whether he did apply Christian principles," said Lord Hugh Cecil in a speech at the Church Assembly.

"It is unwise that the clergy should be talking about political, industrial and international questions. There is a sense of profound burden when a clergyman repeats on a Sunday the daily article which has appeared in the daily press. Let us bear something which is distinctly spiritual. I believe it is because this is not done that our sermons are so dull. A topical sermon is, I think, one of the most tiresome things in the world."

Edison and Immortality

"The moment that the working, intellectual religious show that there are fifty-two points of evidence for immortality contrasted with forty-eight points against it, that moment the fact (not theory, mind you, or the faith, or anything but fact) will be accepted by all men. Today the preponderance of probability very greatly favors belief in the immortality of the intelligence, or soul, of man," says Mr. Edison, the famous inventor, in the New York Times.

"In the meantime, let the reformed, reconstituted and re-enlightened church teach everything that can be proved about things spiritual and then devote its efforts to imparting to its congregations convictions as to the primary necessity for beauty, honesty, and health. These things include everything really worth while. Nothing should be based upon belief which is not in its turn based upon truth."

"Mr. Edison is coming into the light," observes the Raleigh News and Observer. "He is growing old and his new conception is proof of the words. At evening time there shall be light."

The Value of Pastoral Calling

There seems to be quite a considerable difference of opinion relative to the value of pastoral calling. A number of preachers think that it is obsolete, unifying a man, squandering time that should be given to study, prayer and meditation. That a man cannot do it in the pulpit. If he wears out his shoe leather tramping the streets from house to house.

But here is a testimony on the other side from a minister who was a highly successful pastor, and who now occupies a leading place in American Christianity, namely Bishop Charles H. Brent of Buffalo, New York.

The Christian Advocate recently said: "In the course of the autobiographical sketch which was printed in "The Churchman" of November 8, he speaks of his fifteen years' service in St. John Stephen's parish in the South End of Boston, in association with Father Torbert. 'A more loyal and united congregation never existed than that to which we jointly ministered. It was the pastoral work which held it together. There is no room for doubt that in house to house visiting today lies the strength of the Church. The rector who fails to come to know his people in their homes, who, if he calls at all, does so perfunctorily, or on the occasion of a marriage or funeral only, is not a pastor. He may be a dignitary, but he is not a reservoir of spiritual influence, let his pulpit eloquence be that of angels, and his organizing gift that of a Napoleon. We usually think of Phillips Brooks as a preacher. He was first a pastor and then, because of it, a preacher. He is quoted in Bishop Lawrence's Memoirs as saying: 'I wish that I could devote every hour of the day to calling on my people. I know of no happier or more helpful work that a pastor can do, and I call as much as I can. How is it possible for one to preach to his people if he does not know them, their doubts, sorrows and ambitions?"

"It would be difficult to discover the secret of the spell that Bishop Brooks' preaching had on people. It lies hidden in that subtle thing, personality. He had at times such an influence on me that I was affected physically. I felt as if I might be the string of a harp on which a master hand was playing. I vibrated to his touch. But of this I am convinced, that much of the secret of his power lay in his experimental knowledge of human life, worked out in his pastoral relationships. There is no need of setting preaching and pastoral visiting one against the other. The good pastor is always worth listening to in the pulpit."
THE CONDITIONS OF SALVATION
By A. M. Hills

Text: "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else" (Isaiah 45:22).

Fifty-seven years ago, I read Charles Spurgeon's account of his own conversion. It was an event very hard when he, a sixteen-year-old lad, started for church. Getting tired of facing the storm, he turned aside to a humble Methodist chapel in an obscure street and listened to an ignorant lay preacher preach from the above text. He pointed his finger at the youth and shouted, "Young man, you are in trouble. Look to Jesus and be saved!" Charles Spurgeon looked and was saved, and became one of the world's greatest preachers.

1. Manifestly the whole world needs salvation. The race has lost its innocence. Something is wrong with every heart and tribe and family of man. No individual escapes the hereditary moral ailments. This is not a theory, but a universal fact. The man who denies it is well, is more than half effect and playing the fool. Every intelligent and thoughtful man knows that the whole race is sick with the awful malady of sin.

2. The Christian religion has an omnipotent Savior as its heart and life, and is the only religion that can save. "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11:28) "I am the bread of life." (John 6:35) "I am the light of the world." (John 8:12) "Learn of me." (Matt. 11:29) "Look unto me and be ye saved." (Isaiah 45:22)

Such language would have no meaning in the lips of any other founder of religion, this world ever had. But it was perfectly becoming and appropriate in the lips of Jesus. Why? Because "I am God, and besides me, there is none else." (Isaiah 45:22) "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." (Acts 4:12)

3. Man, to be saved, must co-operate with God. It is a Calvinistic nonsense to talk about man as being passive in salvation. He must "turn the Lord while he may be found." He must "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" (Ezek. 18:30) "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." (John 1:12)

And may the Lord in His infinite goodness and mercy give to us all the submissive will, the conquering spirit, the single eye, and, above all, the heart that is perfect toward Him. Then will He show Himself strong on our behalf. (2 Chron. 14:9).

II. THE PHARISEES
   1. Originally a holy sect.
   2. The guardians of the divine law.
   3. The peculiar people of God to guard His Word.

Illustration: Josephus represents the Pharisees as leading a temperate life, renouncing both excesses and immorality, and striving above all to acquire a knowledge of that law and to practice those precepts which would fit them for the life to come.

III. THE PRACTICE OF CHRISTIAN LIFE
   1. They prayed.

III. THE GIFT AND THE ALTAR
   1. True devotion embraces self-examination.
lack or suffer; none is able to move thee. In the battle it is a stronghold.

2. A Retreat for the Night. The Hebrew word for abide carries the meaning of remaining for the night. Our souls know the night—the fire of trial and tribulation, broken ambitions, etc. For such storms, such nights, dwell, soul, under this retreat.

3. A Heavenly Retreat. This retreat is eternal—lasting—dwelling in the heavenly places—strengthened with heavenly might—finally it is a heavenly habitation, the New Jerusalem.

Conclusion: Ye who are out in the storm, come under this soul retreat! Ye who are alone in the night, come under the Almightv's shadow! Ye who are lost, come to the retreat eternal!

The Treasures of the Lord
TEXT: "The Lord shall open unto thee his good treasures" (Deut. 28:12).

Introduction: The treasures of the Lord in contrast with life's jewels, gems, golden crowns, empires to rule. All are—the Lord's—all grace abounding—riches unsearchable. God will open unto us:

1. Treasures of a Christ-centered Life. But one life is worth while, the life centered in Christ. A walk as that of Christ: a mind like Christ's; loves and ambitions and daily services like Christ's.

2. Treasures of a Life Dead to Sin. A Christ-centered life is one dead to sin. He will liberate one from the rulership of sin. He will break the bonds of death eternal and set the soul forever free.

3. Treasures of a Life Consecrated to an Ennobling Ideal. Livingston; Patton, consecrated to an ennobling ideal. Moody, Wesley, Finney, or consecrated. God will open up the treasures of a life of holy conquest. He will lead us into paths of service unknown. He will so transform us that it will seem impossible.

Conclusion: Appropriating these treasures. They are ours, but unless we use them, seek for them, they remain useless.

The Crimson Stream
TEXT: "There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God" (Psalm 46:4).

Introduction: The crimson stream flowing through the centuries—tribbles from Calvary, flows out with widening force, sweeps through the ages with majestic power. They plunge in from every land and clime and are transformed. This is the river of which the poet sang,

There is a fountain filled with blood, Drawn from Immanuel's veins; And sinners plunged beneath that flood, Lose all their guilty stains.

1. The Crimson Stream Blots Out Transgressions. Its power wipes the soul clean from all stains of iniquity. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow."

2. The Crimson Stream Transforms Character. Naught else will transform the soul but this flow. It breaks habits, purifies the intellect, fires the emotions with holy capacities and abilities, remakes the man.

3. The Crimson Stream Alone Meets the Requirements of Eternity. Time will recede; eternity will draw on; the judgment will set—eternity's requirements will be met when written across the "book of life" are these words, "Saved through Jesus' blood." Training will not prepare; finance will not buy one's way through; culture will fail.

Conclusion: Plunge beneath its crimson flow!

The Blossoming Desert
TEXT: "The desert, shall blossom as the rose" (Isaiah 35:1).

Introduction: The burning desert a picture of the desert of sin and of life— parched ground, dead verdure, waterless stretches—souls destroyed by iniquity, passions that eat as a canker. But Isaiah saw it blossom into a fragrant garden, when Christ or salvation came to it.

1. The Desert of Life. Life without Christ is a desert, a barren waste, ruled by blighting winds of fate. The aching heart; the burdens borne alone help forth this desert. Even the flowers carry vipers and every banquet class with a scene of blood and death.

2. When Christ Comes. Christ alone changes life, renews the soul, lifts the burdens, lights the night, shines with a holy radiance into the inner being.

3. The Blossoming Desert. The night now is illumined with the "morning star;" the day is made fragrant with the "Rose of Sharon." Evil habits give way to a Christlike character. Melody breaks forth when the soul is redeemed. This is the desert abomn, for Christ is in it.

Conclusion: Christ makes the life fragrant with Christian graces. The life becomes a garden abomn with love. The beauty of the "Rose of Sharon" makes radiant the countenance. Let thy desert blossom with the glory of the "lily of the valley."

The Mother's Throne
TEXT: "Bithsheba therefore went unto king Solomon . . . and [he] caused a throne to be set for the king's mother; and she sat on his right hand" (1 Kings 2:19).

Introduction: Describe thrones of ancient monarchs with all their sparkling grandeur—royal rulers of distant day clothed with fabled story—and the glory of Solomon. The mother's throne is of greater power and worth to the world than these.

1. The Mother's Throne One of Love. Paint a wonderful picture of a mother's love—the childhood home—the caressing hand. No love comparable to this.

2. The Mother's Throne One of Godly Influence. Mother's influence molds the destiny of the child and youth. Augustine and his famous mother—Wesley and his matchless mother—worthy sons of worthy mothers! She sets ambitions, infatues, ideals, shapes the character.

3. Mother's Throne One of Greater Splendor, Glory and Power Than Any Monarch of the Age. They ruled small empires, mothers away the scepter over the rolling centuries. Their thrones crumble, but hers rides the storms of the ages to eternity.

Conclusion: A charge to mothers: You mold the centuries—your influence lifts empires from their hinges—your power it rightly employed will change the stream of time (Wesley's mother's did). Be thou an example of holiness, of chastity in morals and decorum, of uprightness of ideals and of purity of speech.

SERMON STUDIES IN HEBREWS
By W.W. CLAY

VIII. Backsliding and Apostasy (concluded)

Let us notice the other great reference to this subject in the book of Hebrews (chapter 10:26-31). Here the author of Hebrews is not talking of apostasy or of falling away, but of sin. The passage considered in the previous article referred to rejecting the atonement of Christ: this, to going again into sin. "No distinction is here made as to the nature of the sin as to whether it was the crime of murder or adultery, or a mere refusal to obey God. The one characterization that is made is that it is a wilful sin.

The first fact that is apparent in this scripture is God's definition of sin—not that it is an act out of harmony with the will of God, but that it is a break between the will of man and the will of God. All wrong acts are voluntary, but not all wrong acts are the result of a break with the will of God. A child who dearly loves its father may thoughtlessly throw something that would injure the father, and cause him pain; yet because there was no break between the will of the father and child, there would be no sense in which it could be called a wilful sin. But if the child deliberately defied the command of the father, even if the distrop result was of little effect as to his comfort, yet the attitude of the child is that of rebellion to the father's will, and is in its true sense a sin.

Then follows another revelation in the text, that all acts which though done voluntarily and though they may be contrary to the will of God are yet done in ignorance of that will, are constantly covered by the blood: there does remain "a sacrifice for sins," that are so committed, and there is no "fearful looking for of judgment" that is the inescapable penalty of the man who willfully sins. This does not preclude the necessity of repentance for such acts and the asking for their forgiveness. The child who really loved its parent, should incidentally cause that father pain, would be truly sorry for the injury and ask forgiveness; while the father might chide the child, for its carelessness or deprive it of privileges in order to prevent the recurrence of the act; and yet there would be no thought of any rebellion on the part of the child nor of forfeiture of fellowship on the part of the father. So when the believer sins ignorantly of the Father's will, though he may and should seek forgiveness when he realizes his wrong, yet he has been in the favor and fellowship of God all the while because a "sacrifice for sins remnant" for him in just such emergencies.

Then follows the next revelation, that as soon as a believer's will breaks with the will of God in a "wilful" sin, regardless of the lightness of the offense or the enormity of the crime, instantly he passes out from under the blood—"there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." More than this, he suffers not merely the loss of fellowship but there comes to his soul the divine condemnation, "a certain fearful looking for of judgment." And God reveals that this is brought about, not by a continued course of sin, but by just one sin. One sin brought death to Adam and to the whole human race—it will bring death to any soul. Just one sin brings condemnation—and "there is therefore no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Just one lie will shut a man out of heaven—"whosoever loveth or maketh a lie." One murder makes a man a murderer—and the Word declares that "no murder hath eternal life abiding in him" (1 John 3:15). Just one sin brought carnality into Adam's heart, and it will do the same for every other heart, so that the sanctified soul that breaks with God needs not only forgiveness but the second crisis of heart cleansing as well. The truth taught by the Word that the sanctifying baptism of the Holy Spirit must come as a second experience is exactly as binding in the restoration of a soul as in its initial experience. Any argument that could be brought to demonstrate that a backslider could be saved and sanctified all at once would be within the terms of the one who had never had the experience. If God were to make any difference at all, He would do it for the man who was ignorant of the process, rather than for the man who had once had the blessing and knew the way.

Now note the final count in the indictment against the believer who commits wilful sin—he has become God's adversary: "which shall devour the adversaries." As an adversary he has put his heel upon Christ—"trod under foot the Son of God," despoiled the blood—"counted the blood of an unholy thing," and insulted the Holy Spirit—"thou hast done despite unto the Spirit of grace." And lest there should be those who would try to evade the fact that God is here speaking of those who were once saved; lest the statement "those who have received the knowledge of the truth" be construed to mean sinners who had heard the word but had rejected it; God here declares that those who thus trample Christ under their feet, and are adversaries, to God, are those who once had been under the blood—"counting the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing." It may be objected that this represents the state of the sinning believer and not his standing: So look at what God has revealed in this text as to the standing of the backslider. First, he is headed for judgment—"a certain, fearful looking for of judgment," yet God has declared that a believer shall not come into judgment—"His judgment belongeth not unto judgment" (John 5:24, R. V.). Second, he is the object of fiery indignation, which cannot be said of anyone who is "the possessor of eternal life." Third, he is declared worthy of greater punishment than those who despised Moses' law: their punishment was death, but the punishment that could be greater than death would not be any punishment of earth but eternal death. Fourth, they are set forth as the objects of divine vengeance, in the verse immediately following: "For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord." And lastly the one who draws back is declared to be on his road to perdition (10:26).

In all this there is no hint that such a backslider, though his sin of heart rebellion is more awful than that of the one who had never been saved, may not be forgiven and restored. Thank God, the unconditional promise of Jesus, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out," (John 6:37) applies as well to a backslidden Peter as to a persecuting Saul.

But it is a matter of astonishment that in the face of the fact that so much scripture is positively against the once-in-grace-always-in-grace theory and so little that can be brought by its adherents as having any reference to it at all, that it should be so tenaciously insisted upon and so strongly emphasized. By some of its advocates it is put as one of the essential doctrines of the fundamentalists; by others it is more often mentioned than repentence or the fulness of the Spirit. Yet it is not a doctrine that even if it were true could be an important one for the man who does not embrace it could suffer no loss for he would be in grace whether he believed it or not, and the man who preached to the contrary could not send any soul to hell by his error, for according to the theory they would be eternally secure regardless of their belief or disbelief. On the other hand, if it be not true, to preach it will send a multitude to hell by making them think they are safe while they live in sin. For there are multiplied instances of those who had such a real faith in Christ that their being saved was unquestioned, who let go of God and suffered in that condition without giving any sign of repentance or of return to Christ. If this theory is true they were saved, but if it is not true they were lost, and if they put off their return to God because someone had taught them they were safe anyway, that teacher was responsible for their damnation. Hence, there is no apparent gain to anyone by believing such a doctrine and nothing to lose by rejecting it—a statement that is also true of the teaching that there is no hell, and many other false doctrines.

Let us in considering these statements in Hebrews compare that of the rest of the Word of God on the subject. There is the warning of God in almost the very last words of the Bible to certain persons that He will "take away his part out of the book of life." God does not anywhere in the Word threaten impossibilities. Look at the definite statement in Ezek. 33:13: "When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it." This thought found in the Old Testament is not spoken from the standpoint of law but of grace: God here defines the righteousness that saves as that which He imparts—"When I say . . . that he shall surely live," as distinguishing from iniquity that fails to save—"his own righteousness." Note, too, the positiveness of God's declaration of the possession of eternal life: the use of the word "surely" is equivalent with God to an oath, as God himself declares in Heb. 6:15, 14; making this text even stronger as to the possession of God-given life than the one which the advocates of eternal security quote oftenest (John 10:27, 28). Yet although God's promise of eternal life is here sealed with the oath of God, yet that gift of eternal life is forfeited by sins said: "If he . . . commit iniquity, he shall die." And in the parallel passage in Ezek. 18:20 it declares that this death is not physical death, but soul-death: "the soul that sinneth, it shall die."

Then look at the very passage upon which practically every teacher of this once-in-grace doctrine bases his doctrine, John 10:27, 28. Here God declares that those to whom He gives eternal life are those who follow Him: "My sheep—follow me," yet these teachers say that even if we are not following Him we are His sheep, a contradiction of what the passage declares. The truth is that as long as we follow we are His sheep and as the verse in the original implies, He keeps giving to us who thus follow eternal life. There is no warrant whatever to regard this gift of eternal life as a permanent unalienable bestowment.

A text that bears on this very point is and is decisively against the theory of eternal security that its defenders rarely if ever quote it, is John 15:1-6: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away . . . If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned." Here God is speaking of a real branch—"in me"—not an imitation or something tied on or unscrupulously grafted on. A man could not be asked to abide in Christ who was not already in Christ. Then, too, nothing can wither that has not first had life. Yet this branch "in me" that had the life of the vine not only withered, and was cast off, but it never got back into the vine again—it was burned. Nor is Jesus figuratively speaking here, in verse 6; he is definitely referring to a "man." Nor is the translation correct for the Authorized Version that says "Men gather them," the word "men" is not in the original. The correct reading is given in the Revised Version: "they gather them." If you would know who it is that gathers up these who once had eternal life and casts them into the fire, and what the fire is into which the angels cast them, note the Savior's words in Matt. 25.41 where He says that man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all those who offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Yet this unscriptural doctrine to which has been given the time-sounding name of eternal security is being preached from hundreds of pulpits; and the dangerous thing about it is that it is many of those who believe and teach it are ministers whose lives are above outward reproach, who are gifted with talent and personality, and who stand for the inspiration of the Bible as a source of Christian experience. Yet it has always been the tactics of Satan to proclaim his false doctrines through the lips of good men rather than through his own followers. And this doctrine, coming from the ones who are the trusted defenders of the faith, is doing untold damage to the cause of God. It has its effect on the methods of those who teach it. Very few of them insist on really praying through—just an insistence on a mental acceptance of Christ followed by a verbal acceptance of Him in public. Repentance is being minimized as a condition of salvation. If their converts quit their sins, so much the better; but if they do not, they are told that they ought to and unless they do they will suffer the loss of rewards; yet no matter how they live, they cannot be lost. Hence, it has a deleterious effect on those who come under their teaching.

A group of young people were saved in a revival held by a minister who though an earnest follower of Christ held and preached this doctrine of eternal security. After a time, these young people went back to the dances, shows and card parties that they had given up when they were converted. When reported to their pastor they admitted that they ought not to do so, but said nevertheless that they were still saved and could not be lost, no matter how they lived—and they were, right if their pastor had taught them was true.

This then is the reason why Satan so industriously spreads this doctrine and encourages men to keep it to the forefront. It permits sin in the life, apologizes for it, and makes Christ a cover for a continual life of sin. What a slander on a holy God to say, as this doctrine does, that one man who is a blasphemer, liar, murderer, panderer, ruiner of Innocent girls, is a saved man, possessing eternal life and sure of heaven at last, while another man whose outward life was moral would go to hell, all because the first had at one time in his life believed on Christ. What a comfort to the man who does not want to quit his sin such a doctrine must be.

Preachers, warn men that "the wages of sin is death," and that there is no exception. God's law, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" has never been repealed. The "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" can only make you "free from the law of sin and death" as it through His blood pays the penalty for sins that are past and through His power keeps you from going again into sin. When we let go of God and go back into sin, we again become bond servants of sin and of Satan.

Then, too, let us persistently preach the love of Christ for those who have lost eternal life, even though they have gone back to the depths of sin. Like the sheep that was lost, they still have physical life, yet have lost all the life that came to them through the Shepherd—His care, His fellowship, His protection, His safety. No sheep out of the fold is safe. Yet the Shepherd still loves it and will follow it and try to bring it back. Or like the prodigal son, they may have the physical life that came from the Father, yet as far as the true life of the home is concerned, they are dead, shut off from its joy, no claim on its inheritance, shut out from its safety. But if they will but return and repent, a loving Father will not only restore their fellowship with Him but the life that is lost with its safety and inheritance, and announce to the angels, "This my son was dead and is alive again."
could not be lost, no matter how they lived—and they were right if what their partner had taught them was true.

This then is the reason why Satan so industriously spreads this doctrine and encourages men to keep to the forepart. It permits sin in the life, apologizes for it, and makes Christ a cover for a continual life of sin. What a slander on a holy God to say, as this doctrine does, that one man who is a blasphemer, liar, murder, plunderer, rumber of innocent girls, is a saved man, possessing eternal life and sure of heaven at last, while another man who outwardly was moral would go to hell, all because the first had at one time in his life believed on Christ. What a comfort to the man who does not want to quit his sin such a doctrine must be.

Preachers, warn men that "the wages of sin is death," and that there is no exception. God's law, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," has never been repealed. The "law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" can only make you "free from the law of sin and death" as it through. His blood pays the penalty for sins that are past and through His power keeps you from going again into sin. When we let go of God and go back into sin, we again become "deceased in trespasses and in sins."

Then, too, let us persistently preach the love of Christ for those who have lost eternal life, even though they have gone back to the depths of sin. Like the sheep that was lost, they still have physical life, yet have lost all the life that came to them through the Shepherd—His care, His fellowship, His protection, His safety. Or like the prodigal son, they may have the physical life that came from the Father, yet as far as the true life of the home is concerned, they are dead, shut off from its joy, no claim on its inheritance, shut out from its safety. But if they will return repentant, a loving Father will not only restore their fellowship with Him but the life that they lost with its safety and inheritance, and announce to the angels, "This my son was dead and is alive again."

Outlines
Test, Heb. 3:13, as explanatory of Gen. 3:14.

Theme, The Greatest Lie Ever Told
1. The Bible inexpressably connects sin and deception. While deception is of itself a sin, it is also the outstanding characteristic of sin. Note the Saviour's words regarding Satan—"a liar and the father of it." 2. Go back to the record of the first sin. Before the sin of Adam and Eve was committed, a lie was told; and this lie was not only the cause of the first sin, but has been back of every sin since then, so that it may be truly called the greatest lie ever told.

I. The Greatest Lie Ever Told—"Thou shalt not surely die."
1. Greatest in that it was not the careless utterance of a man but the carefully laid plot of all hell. No other lie ever had such a diabolical purpose.
2. Greatest in that it is the opposite of the greatest truth on which all the happiness and harmony of the universe depend, faith in God and obedience to God.
3. Greatest in its consequences. Other lies have separated friends, broken up homes, saddened hearts, lost fortunes, changed history; but this lie wrecked a world and peopled hell.
4. GREATEST in its extent. Has lasted through the world's centuries and is told today stronger than ever. Told by more people. All the world outside Christ is spreading it. Other lies told by the group of persons who have led in- infidels and church members, illiterates and college professors, business men and spendthrifts, bootleggers and bishops. Everywhere it is being told, "You can sin and get away with it."

II. The Modern Versions of Sin's Deception
1. Christian Science. God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die!" and when Christian Science says that there is no such thing as sin or death it charges God with lying and repeats the lie of the ages.
2. The Universalist. The man that says God is too good to punish sin, and that no man will surely die.
3. The Russellite, who says that you will not surely die, but in another age have a second chance.
4. The Modernist, who says that God never said it, that sin is only a step upward, that hell is only a fiction, that there is no penalty for sin aside from its immediate consequences.
5. The advocate of the once-in-grace-always-in grace theory, who says that if you have just trusted in Christ, after that you may sin and not die, indeed they say that no matter how much you sin you cannot die—just another echo of the old lie, "Ye shall not surely die."

III. The Warfare of the Ages Is with the Deceptiveness of Sin
1. Not a question of church membership or of creeds, but of the reality and awfulness of sin.
2. It directly affects the work of the Church of God. "No church can enter into the work of soul winning unless it realizes the power and penalty of sin.
3. It nullifies the cross of Christ. Heb. 9:26 declares that the purpose of Christ in His eternal sacrifice was not to apologize for sin, nor to cover up sin, but to excuse sin, but to put away sin.

IV. Conclusion
1. Point out the deception of sin as applied to your hearers, in alluring to pleasure, in getting them to procrastinate their return to God, in making them think they can control it or work their way out of it. The text says, it hardens.
2. Apply the injunction of the text—"Today!"

ILLUSTRATIVE MATERIAL
Compiled by J. Glenn Gould
The illustrations which follow are all taken from a book by Rev. F. W. Boreham, the well-known Australian preacher and author. Mr. Boreham is one of the most versatile and luminous preachers of this generation. His preaching is not only to infidels and church members, illiterates and college professors, business men and spendthrifts, bootleggers and bishops. Everywhere it is being told, "You can sin and get away with it."

The Cost of Righteousness
In his amusing candid autobiography Benjamin Franklin tells an ugly story. He has been describing his passionate and methodical struggle after goodness. And then he likens himself to "my neighbor, who, in buying an axe of a smith, desired to have the whole of its surface as bright as the edge. The smith consented to grind it bright for him, if he would turn the wheel. He turned, while the smith pressed the broad face of the axe hard and heavily on the stone, which made the turning of it very fatiguing. The man came every now and then from the wheel to see how the work went on. At length he said he would take his axe as it was, without further grinding. 'No,' said the smith, 'turn 'em on, turn 'em, we shall have it bright by and by; as yet it is only speckled.' 'Yes,' said the exhausted man, 'but I think, after all, I like a speckled axe best!'

More Than Conqueror
We have all chuckled over the letter written by the puzzled Pilny to Trajan the emperor concerning the Chrisitians. The poor proconsul is at his wits' ends. He has found a class of criminals for whom his most horrible punishments and his most infamous prisons have no terror. Indeed, they tend to like these things; for more and more persecutes, the more "the contagion of the superstition spreads!" The imprisoned Christians sing in their cells, and the dying martyrs greet the unseen with a cheer. Prisons become palaces to them, and their hardest crusts are transformed into angel food. Pilny confers on his imperial master that he is perfectly bewildered. Again, when one of the early confessors appeared before the Roman emperor, charged with being a Christian, the emperor threatened him with punishment unless he denounced Christ. The Christian replied, "They cannot not, for the world is my Father's house." "But I will say thee," said the emperor. "Nay, but thou canst not, for my life is hid in Christ in God." "I will take away thy treasures." "Nay, but thou canst not," was the reply, "for my treasure is in heaven, and my heart is there." "But I will drive thee away from man, and thou shalt have no friend left." "Nay, but thou canst not," once more said the confessor, "for I have a Friend in heaven, from whom thou canst not separate me. I defy thee; there is nothing thou canst do." And the confessor was probably characterized by a crystal clarity, but is reverent and loyal to the truth as it is in Jesus. Every minister would do well to become acquainted with his published works.

Wait Patiently for Him
Just after I was settled in my New Zealand manse it was my great privilege to entertain one of the most gifted, most experienced, and most gracious of our ministers. I felt it to be a price less opportunity, and I sought to glean all I could of his experience, all I could of his management of all my early ministerial difficulties. One lovely morning we were sitting together on the verandah, looking away across the golden plains to the purple and sunlit mountains, when I broached to him this very question. "Can a man be quite sure," I asked, "that, in the hour of perplexity, he will be rightly led? Can he feel secure against a false step?" I shall never forget his reply. He sprang from his deck chair and came earnestly towards me. "I am certain of it," he exclaimed, "if he will but give God time! Remember that as long as you will give God time, God will give you time!" Dr. Jowett, of New York, says that he was once in the most pitiful perplexity, and consulted Dr. Berry, of Wolverhampton. "What would you do if you were in my place?" he entreated. "I don't know, Jowett, I am not there, and you are not there yet? When do you have to act?" "On Friday," Dr. Jowett replied. "Then," answered Berry. "you will find your way perfectly clear of Friday! The Lord will not fail you!" And, surely enough, Friday all was plain.

I Will Rejoice

There is on record a conversation between Daniel Webster and some of his illustrious contemporaries. Somebody raised the question as to which was the finest passage in the Bible. One argued for the Creation story, another for the Sermon on the Mount, and a third for the description of the redeemed in the book of Revelation. But Webster slowly quoted these exquisite verses from one of the minor prophets: "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vine; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." "I am amazed," said Webster, "that no talented painter has seen there a subject for a master-piece—the prophet Habakkuk sitting in the midst of his drearful desolation, still praising God and rejoicing in his unseen Savor!"

All Things Are Possible

Is the immediate conquest of the world possible? The question is ridiculous. The world contains millions of Christians. But the task does not need millions. Millions ought to be able to evangelize the entire universe. Fifty men of the stamp of Paul and Xavier and Wesley would make Christ known to every living soul on the face of the earth in twenty years. That is our shame. If I could call spirits from the vastly deep, and if they would come when I did call for them, I would undertake to summon to the task a hundred heroes who would make the whole wide world ring with the praise of Christ, whilst we are still drowsing over, our minute books. It is the indisputable possibility of the task that makes our tragic failure so shockingly humiliating. Yes, it is all quite clear. We simply need to visit the Delectable Mountains with Christiana and her party; and to climb Mount Marvel, "where was a man who tumbled the hills about to show pilgrims how to tumble their difficulties out of their way." This redoubtable son of Great Grace knew perfectly well that there is no room in the universe—not in a million universes—for both a God and an impossibility. If you are quite sure of God, there is no crack or crevice among all His worlds that can harbor an impossibility. Atheism alone is the realization of the impossible; and, for that very reason, it is an impossible religion. No man yet born has a faith strong enough to permit of his believing in God and in the impossible at one and the same time. All things possible to him that believeth.

Sacrificial Devotion

In his "Legend of the Eagles" George d'Espartes says that the most heroic piece of self-sacrifice known to history occurred a century ago. "It was in the depth of winter, and the French army, protected on all sides by the Cossacks, had to cross a river. The enemy had destroyed all the bridges, and Napoleon was almost at his wits' end. Suddenly came the order that a bridge of some sort must be thrown across the river, and the men nearest the water, of course, were the first to carry out the almost-impossible task. Several were swept away by the furious tide. Others, after a few minutes, sank through cold and exhaustion; but more came and the work proceeded as fast as possible. At last the bridge was completed, and the army reached the opposite bank in safety. Then followed a dramatic scene, one of the most horrible recorded in the annals of any nation. When the men who had built the bridge were called out of the water, not one moved. Clinging to the pillars, there they stood silent and motionless. It was soon found that they had been frozen to death, their arms rigidly fixed against the woodwork in the attitude of Caryatides—the Caryatids of death. Napoleon, who witnessed the awful scene, could not, in spite of his impassive temperament, restrain his tears."

Careful for Nothing

I sat for a moment or two before the fire, with my Bible for company. I sat captivated by those great words of Paul to the Philippian: "Be careful for nothing . . . and the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." I fear I must have dozed. For, all at once, I saw a garden. The bed was overgrown with weeds. Beside it stood the Master and the gardener. In His hand the Master held three rare and radiant chrysanthemums. They formed a perfect riot of floral glory. Their flowering petals were like flattering tassels of beauty. Their fragrance was delicious. "Grow chrysanthemums like these," said the Master to the gardener, "and I will bring you the seed of the sweeter, the greater, and with which to make a border round the bed." The gardener eyed the exquisite blossoms admiringly, and then, close to the Master's fingers, he caught sight of a tiny label with which the wind was playfully toying.

The gay chrysanthemums were labeled CHEERFULNESS—Be careful for nothing. And then a look of wonderful insight and understanding overspread the countenance of the gardener.

"Yes," repeated the Master deliberately, "if you can grow chrysanthemums like these in the bed here, I will give you the rarest Heart's-ease for a border—The Face of God which passeth all understanding."

Theme, The Exceeding Riches of His Grace.

Indifference

When Jesus came to Golgotha they hanged Him on a tree; They drove great nails through hands and feet, and made a Calvary; They crowned Him with a crown of thorns, red were His wounds and deep; For these were crude and cruel days, and human flesh was cheap.

When Jesus came to Birmingham they simply passed Him by; They never hurt a hair of Him, they only let Him die; For many had grown more tender, and they would not give Him pain— They only just passed down the street and left Him in the rain.

Still Jesus cried, "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." And still it rained the winter rain that drenched Him through and through. The crowds went home and left the streets without a soul to see, And Jesus crouched against a wall and cried for Calvary!—G. A. Studdert-Kennedy, in "The Sorrows of God."
READING AND THE PREACHER

By Byron H. Mauzury

Bacon put the matter in a nutshell when in every concise words he said, "Reading serves for delight, for ornament, and for ability. The crafty commend it; the simple admire it; the wise use it. Reading makes a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man. He that writes little needs a great memory; he that confers little, a present wit; and he that reads little, much cunning to seem to know that which he does not."

In other words, reading contributes to the public speaker's success much as putting the cider into the old barrel does to getting it out. Put nothing in and you get nothing out. Reading fills the mind with facts, images and fables; informs as well as pleases. All men should read, but the preacher must read.

The habit of reading, whether natural or acquired, must be kept alive, if the relish for it would be retained. And the only way to keep it burning is to add more fuel as needed, and to fan it habitually. Only by reading faithfully, can this be realized. Read as you walk, as you ride, as you wait, and as you can. I knew a preacher who read the entire New Testament through in a short time while waiting for his wife to prepare breakfast. Who was that man who became great, who became a man of the people and the bride of his master's house as he made calls?

It has been said that the preacher should be a man of one book, the Bible. True! For what the law is to the lawyer, what the blueprint is to the builder is what the Word of God is to the minister of God. Without the Word he would be in the same fix as a fish out of water, out of his element, and void of the proper background. Whatever else he may know he must know his Bible. The Bible gives us depth of thought, as well as authority of statement.

But extensive reading in the fields of human thought and action, fact and fancy is also essential to a preacher if he would be an interesting, informing, and effective preacher, if he would have breadth. The truth of the ages, as stored away in the ancient classics, in the archives of history, in the lives of the great, in the findings and teachings of science and nature are veritable gold mines of inspiration. We cannot afford to miss help from any source. There is no illustration of principle, or statement of fact, no message of truth, no elaboration of precept that the most learned can pass by with complacency, for the gospel is so precious, and tools too valuable to ignore any thing that would assist us in getting our message over. There is a danger, of course, that a preacher may become bookish. Then, too, he may come to read other things to the neglect of the most important study, the Bible. To bear this in mind will help to escape these snare. A minister taught an old man in his parish to read. He proved a proficient scholar. After the tutoring had come to an end, the minister was not able to call at the cottage for some time, and when he did find him only the wife at home. "How is John?" said he. "He's catty, sir," said the wife. "How does he get on with his reading?" "Nicely," said the wife. "Ah, I suppose he will read his Bible very comfortably now." "Bible, sir! Bless you, he was out of the Bible and into the newspapers long ago!" Let us take warning, and with all our reading not get into other-things to the neglect of the Word of God.

In support and illustration of the necessity and importance of reading, I would quote from the pen of a man who was the bridle of his master's horse as he made calls.

The above words require no comment. They speak volumes. Decide them for yourself. They are a powerful incentive. Grasp the purpose of Wesley. Maybe some of us are not as bad as John Trentham. Still, we might be helped by the perusal of the above. Show me a man who thinks he can't improve and I'll show you a dummited-up stream, or worse yet, a stagnant pool. None are too old to learn, none too young to begin. Reading is the combination that opens all doors of truth.

How do you read? Do you ever use pencil or pen? Do you underline, mark things that strike you? Do you make marginal notes that push the ideas on the page further, or that nail down some passing thought prompted by something read within? If the books which you read are your own, mark the things you desire to remember. Thus you may read the second time through, and half the trouble of rereading. Envelope running over the paragraphs which your pencil has noted. It is a weak objection against this practice to say, "I shall spoil my book." Well, did you buy it like a book-seller to sell it again and again? Or as a scholar to improve your mind thereby? If your mind be improved, it is to your advantage, even though the books yield less money to your executors.

Some books are more fruitful than others. I heard Rev. Leewin B. Williams say that he didn't mind paying a dollar or two for a book if he got something out of it. Of the making of books there is no end, it seems. And we live in days of prolific bookmaking. But with all that, real good books are rare, and when you come across one that stimulates thinking, compels thought, prompts your fancy, and sits to action, treat it as an heirloom.

Reading will do for the preacher many times what grandfather used to do to the pump. The pump would be dry, and would not draw. He would then take a little water which was generally kept handy for the purpose, and pour it into the top of the pump and prime it, and in this manner would get the old pump to working, pouring out the abundance of its contents. So it is with the preacher who needs many times to be primed. Most of us can generally make an outline, but to get meat to fill it in is the problem, and it takes no small one, either. We are much indebted to the editorial by a sermon by Spurgeon, a comment by Matthew Henry, a passage by Paul, a proverb by the wise man, something another has said, an incident of local or national interest, a special day, many things we see or hear, serve to prime our mental and spiritual pumps to action, producing sermons and talks, etc., and we will find that the majority of the stimuli which incite to mental action come by reading.

Don't read for mere amusement, nor to pass the time away. Read to improve the tone and strength of the mind by an analyzing, discriminating and thinking manner of reading. Don't read too much, but endeavor to absorb and remember what you do read. Pay great attention to the nature of the reading you do. The object of reading is the acquisition of power, to develop powers of thought—memory, judgment, comprehension, and ability to create, to originate thought and action, as well as to analyze the creations of others. It is not how many books we have that counts. My father once warned me that it is not how many books one has that counts. He said, "Better have a few books and know their contents well, than many books and know little about any.

Reading requires application; study requires pains; but both redound to the credit of the preacher, as well as to the glory of God. Next to private devotions and Bible study, reading is the greatest need of the mind of God. The one we must do, the other we can't afford to leave undone. And to fall below the best within us is to fall ourselves and the God who made us. 2 Timothy 2:15 and 1 Timothy 4:13 are scriptures pertinent to the subject and it might be said that they are the dictates of a man who knew the vital necessity of reading to the present age.

Whoever said, "You can't tell by the hank of the horn how much gas there is in the tank," sured must have had in mind a preacher like John Trenibath. The preacher certainly cannot give his congregation more than he has. God can use a tool, of course; but a keen one would do better work. Therefore, in order to obtain a keenener mental edge and deeper spiritual insight into truth most successful men have found it necessary to do much reading. Success doesn't happen. It is organized, prepared, captured by common sense. In these days of abundant books there is no excuse for anyone's not growing in grace and knowledge.
We may be content with what we have, but should never be with what we are.

DAVID'S DOWNFALL AND RECOVERY

BY E. P. STEELMAKER

Text: "But the thing that David had done displeased the Lord" (2 Samuel 11:27)

A MAN may climb to the top branch of a tree but if he loses his hold he falls and as a rule continues to fall until he is at the bottom. Sometimes he may regain his hold but generally he keeps slipping until he hits terra firma. In like manner, man is at the beginning step with God they are so numerous that the tem-plation that they do not fully realize they are slip-ing until they themselves under guilt and condemnation.

Here we have a full sized picture of "a man after God's own heart," falling from a mighty pinnacle. Infidels in all ages have gloated over David's sin, though they have not "acknowledged" as did he their transgressions, nor written his penitential psalm.

Let us look at the facts. In the first book of Samuel 13:14, David is mentioned as a man after God's own heart. More than a half century later, when corrupted by power and indulgence, and led astray by temptation, he sinned, repented, and sufdered. When it was said that David was "a man after God's own heart" he was a lad with a stal-line record, ready to take the place that Saul had failed to fill, and do whatever God commanded him (Acts 13:22). His life as a whole was marked by rare humility and nobility. The wrong things which he did were things which were done by other kings and monarchs in his day and in other days without much notice, with little reproach.

For those things David was smitten with sore affliction, and doomed to perpetual trouble; while the account of him has been written down in all its details, without suppression, apology or defense, and sent down through the ages, giving innidels an occasion to blaspheme" (2 Sam. 12:14); and they read the record and denounced, king David, forgetting that some of their own records if fully unfolded might be as dark as his.

In studying this said picture we will see the steps other have taken in getting away from God. David for his sins being had conquered all his enemies, but we read, "After the year was expired, at the time when kings go forth to battle, that David sent Joab, and his servants with him, and all Israel; . . . But David tarried still at Jerusalem."

1. He was idle. This will ruin any man, family or nation. It has caused the downfall of kings and the overthrow of empires. David was invincible until he "tarried still at Jerusalem" and ceased to fight the battles of the Lord. Then when ease, luxury, and popularity came, he went down with a crash. It would put a stop to a lot of disgrace and divorce scandals if a host of idle men and women could be kept busy caring for a home with several children. They have too much time to get about and meddle with the affairs and affections of others. This is what damned Sodom.

2. He allowed his eyes to wander. "In an eventing tide [after an afternoon nap], David arose from off his bed, and walked upon the housetop of the king's house: and from the roof saw a woman.

3. He became oblivious to other rights. "David sent messengers, and took her." Here he loses all sense of justice and deliberately becomes a high-handed robber. There was no domestic, or physical excuse for this act. But when a man loses his footing and is swept into the vortex of evil desire, there is no telling how insane he will become. It is too late to reason with a man when he is half-crazed with passion or rage. The time for putting on the brakes was up away on the road, before the delirium of the incline was so steep.

4. He was disobedient to God's commands. "David brought the woman to his house, and she be-ned him: and she bare him a son. Then David enquired after the woman." An old writer said,
"Idleness and curiosity married together beget envy." True! Let anyone be idle and curious and he will be guilty, not only of the offenses of others, but of those of himself. It is impossible to say an unkind word, or perform an unholy deed except as one has first thought along a similar line.
No marvel then that we read, "As he thinketh in his heart so is he." This then is the real man, regardless of what he professes. He is no better than his thoughts. Tell me what you think and I will tell you what you will do if you have the opportunity. Tell me your mental pictures and I will tell you your standing with God.

quired after the woman." An old writer said, growth of feudalism. This was a military system of land tenure introduced by William the Conqueror. The theory was that all the land belonged to the Crown and those who held it did so as tenants. The king let it out in large areas to his lords and barons in consideration of military service rendered and to be rendered; these then parcelled smaller areas to lesser tenants and these to others of inferiority. The idea essentially was that whenever a man regarded the land as his own, he was the use of lands granted in return for military service. Lordships, vassalage and serfdom obtained and the different grades of tenure and service extended in varying degrees from the king, who it was presumed "could do no wrong," to serf or "slavery."

One can readily see how our system of ownership partakes of the English system. And with this brief outline of the foundation we shall proceed to a study of the land laws of this country. For our purpose four divisions will suffice: I. Nature of Real Property. II. Rights in Real Property. III. Encumbrances on Real Property. IV. Acquisition and Transfer.

I. Nature of Real Property

There are two kinds of property, real and personal. Real property consists of lands and estates in lands. The second of all other kinds of property. In general they may be classed as things immovable, real; and things moveable, personal.

Consequently there are different laws applying to these two classes of property. The one being immovable, the laws governing ownership, title, inheritance, encumbrance and sale of same are much more uniform and rigid. Personal property, consisting in general of things not attached to the land and capable of being moved without injury, the laws relating to possession, ownership, taxation and transfer of these are more flexible, e.g., the title to realty is the evidence of ownership while title to personal property is "prima facie" evidence of ownership. Transfer of the one requires a deed while the other does not. The law where land is situated controls transfer and mortgage of it while the law where the contract is made controls with regard to a sale or mortgage of personalty. On the death of the owner real estate passes to his heirs or devisees while personalty passes to his personal representative. Realty can only be taxed where situated while personalty may be taxed where the owner resides.

Ownership of land includes soils, surface, minerals, permanent structures, woods, water, air, rocks, founis, fenes, bridges, grass, crops, oil, gas, and everything under it to the center of the earth. Downward, and the space above it to an unlimited distance. Any of these things capable of being detached from the land may become personal property when so severed, and when this is done the laws of personality govern. The owner may so convert these at will, and he also may attach chattels to the realty in such manner that they become real estate, in which event they are called "fixtures" and become subject to the laws of real estate.

II. Rights in Real Property

"Title" has been defined as the evidence of ownership. It is the evidence of the right to possession and use of property. When a person owns land he is said to have the title to it. The title to land must be obtained or relinquished in one of two ways: viz., by descent or by purchase. By descent is meant inheritance. The term "purchase" includes much more than is ordinarily understood by it. It includes forfeiture, adverse possession, prescription, alienation, judgment, wills, bankruptcy, etc. Briefly, forfeiture means forfeiting the right to ownership by violation of law or otherwise. Adverse possession means holding under a claim of ownership. Prescription means use of land as if it were one's own. Alienation simply means a voluntary sale or conveyance. Judgment means when a court of competent jurisdiction adjudicates against the supposed owner. Wills dispose of property according to the will of the testator. Bankruptcy is a proceeding under act of congress wherein the debtor surrenders his property to a trustee in bankruptcy for the benefit of creditors.

When a person is in full ownership of a parcel of land he is said to have the fee simple title. Easements in title which was prevented from disposing of his property in lands have been abolished in this country. The system of primogeniture has never prevailed in this country and a person cannot entail his estate by specifying who is to receive it in future. He may transfer the life estate to one; the remainder to pass to another at the death of the first, but he cannot limit the estate beyond the children of someone then living. As to questions of inheritance, transfer, wills, construction of wills, etc., one should always consult the laws of the state where the land is situated. One state cannot enact laws prescribing what shall be done with land in another state.

The title to running water in a stream is not absolute in any owner after whose land it passes, but he has a right to use the same in any legitimate manner and must allow it to pass unobstructed to others in its course. The ownership of ponds and lakes however rests in the owner of the under- lying lands. The title to land lying under navigable streams and lakes is in the state and cannot be usurped by fencing, etc.

Title to land may be gained by acquisition when the impercepible action of the waves of an adjoining stream deposits soil upon the land bordering thereon. One whose land is being injured and reduced by the action of a stream may use any necessary means to protect his land except that he may not alter the course of the stream in so doing. When by the sudden and violent action of nature or the elements, called in law the act of God, the course of a stream is changed into another channel, title to the land lying between the old and new channel will not pass to another as in the case of gradual accretion.

Estates in land may be by sufferance, at the will of the owner, for a term of years, for life, or in fee simple which means absolute ownership.

When by the terms of a conveyance one person is vested with an estate less than fee simple, and at the expiration of his right the title is vested in another, the latter is said to own the remainder.

Title may be vested jointly in two or more persons at the same time, or one may own the life estate and the remainder. Not more than one life estate may be created at one time, however, as this would entail the estate.

The title may be held by one person in trust for another if the instrument of conveyance so provides, but the trustee is strictly bound by the terms of the instrument creating the trust, and must account for the use and profits of the land.

Title to land may be gained by adverse possession. When one holds lands as a matter of right or under claim of ownership for a given time, and during this time no one disputes his claim, his possession will ripen into a good title, and all persons will be stopped to claim the land. The law of adverse possession is different in different states.

Courts and dower are the rights of the surviving husband and widow respectively to the use for life in the lands of a deceased owner. Homestead is a similar estate, and all depend upon the laws of the state.

Rights of way, franchises and easements are forms of limited estates in lands.

III. Encumbrances

There are several different kinds of encumbrances which may be created upon land, and which may hinder the free use or alienation of it. Such are mortgages, vendor's liens, mechanic's liens, materialmen's liens, assessments, taxes, judgments, pending suits, executions, landlord's liens, debts of decedent owners, and perhaps others.

A mortgage is a pledge of property to secure the performance of some act or obligation. This has been a common thing among all peoples and was minutely provided for in the laws of ancient Israel. Any property capable of ownership may be mortgaged except where prohibited by law or against public policy, as in the case of Shylock in the Merchant of Venice. Such a mortgage would be against public policy. A mortgage is substantially the same as a deed of conveyance except that it contains a defeasance clause conditioned upon the performance of an obligation, the discharge of which annuls the conveyance. No particular form is necessary but certain elements must be present in order to its validity. There must be a mortgagee with legal capacity to convey, and a mortgagor with legal capacity to take, there must be a valuable consideration for the mortgage, there must be sufficient particularity of description to identify the property, the defeasance must be specified and it must be properly executed.

Under the law of most states the mortgagor is entitled to the possession and use of the property but the mortgagee has the power to foreclose from unnecessary or unwarranted destruction of the premises.

Both the mortgagor and mortgagee have an insurable interest in the property but neither is obliged to have or keep it insured unless agreed. Each party may have his interest insured and this will not impair his equitable interest.

The mortgagor may, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, sell and convey or otherwise dispose of the property, in which case the mortgage lien will follow the property if properly recorded or notice given. He may also create additional mortgage liens upon the property, these taking rank and precedence in the order of their execution.

The mortgagor may likewise sell and convey his interest in the property and transfer same to his assignee, or in the case of his death it passes to his personal representative as personality. The mortgagee or holder of a mortgage lien is bound to release same upon the performance of the obligation by the mortgagor. Assignments of the lien must be recorded to protect the assignee.

In the absence of a statute to that effect, it is not necessary to the validity of a mortgage for it. to be recorded. If it is unrecorded however it is not effective against subsequent lien-holders, creditors, or innocent purchasers for value, who had no notice of the existence of same.

In order for the mortgagee to protect his lien and make it effective against the aforementioned classes and against all the world he must have his mortgage recorded according to the law of the state where the land is located. If the land lies in more than one county the mortgage must be recorded in each county. Some states require the mortgage to be filed with the recording officer within a specified time to make it recordable and valid.

If the mortgage is unrecorded it will not be good as against bona fide purchasers of the property for value, subsequent lienholders or creditors, unless such actually knew of the existence of the mortgage or had knowledge of facts sufficient to put them upon notice. If actually notified by word of mouth or otherwise this would serve as notice to them.

Mechanics' and materialmen's liens when filed for record and perfected according to law create an encumbrance upon the property involved which has the force and effect of a mortgage. So with landlord's liens.

Vendor's liens recited in deeds, taxes, special assessments according to law, judgments, pending actions involving the title, and like liens, are encumbrances upon the title and follow the land so that subsequent purchasers or creditors are bound thereby.

All kinds of liens, whether mortgage or otherwise, which are recorded, must be released on the record in order to clear the title. The owner upon satisfaction of such liens, should always dimand a release of the lien holder. If this is not done it will constitute a cloud upon the title in definitively.

IV. Acquisition and Transfer

In this country the theory of ownership has always been that the title to land within the territorial limits of the United States rested first in the United States government. The government in turn transferred it to the different states or patented it out to individuals in large tracts. In-tead of the crown as in England, the federal government granted the public lands to be owned by individuals in contemplation of their service as citizens and taxpayers and military service when public necessity required. A government may acquire land by discovery, occupation, conquest, (copied, grant, eminent domain, confiscation or excheat.

In examination of abstracts of titles it is always best to trace the title back to the original patent from the United States government.

In studying the modes of acquisition and transfer it is necessary to make two divisions of the subject, to wit: First, DESCENT; second, PURCHASE

First: When a person dies intestate, i.e., leaving no will, or if he leaves property undisposed of by will, the laws of descent and distribution of the state where the land lies will control the land will pass to the heirs at law of the decedent.
No instrument of conveyance is necessary in this case as the title immediately vests in the heir upon the demise of the ancestor. State laws differ but as a general rule the next of kin in the line of lineal descent will take. If there are no lineal heirs or collateral heirs are next entitled. If no heirs are left and the property is not consumed in settlement of the estate the state may acquire the title under the law of escheat.

Second: Since "wills" are to be discussed in a subsequent article we shall consider only deeds at this time. In deeds of conveyance no certain form is necessary, provided of course the instrument contains the essential elements of a deed. A writing that clearly shows the purpose of the owner of conveyance, describes and names the grantor and grantee, shows a valuable consideration, properly describes the land and is properly executed by the grantor is sufficient in most states. In some places acknowledgment before the proper officer is also necessary to its validity. A state may also require a deed to be recorded before it is operative.

An infant (meaning in law one who has not attained legal age) cannot convey his property. His deed, however, is not absolutely void but is hold-able. Upon reaching his majority he may either affirm or disaffirm his deed previously made. If affirmed either actually or impliedly no new deed is necessary. If he disaffirms he must do so in a reasonable time after becoming of age or he will be presumed to have ratified it. The incapacity of infants to convey does not prevent them from receiving or owning property. They may acquire title in their own names but cannot be divested of same without the process of law.

At common law a married woman could not convey her property and this incapacity was adopted to a large extent in this country. The adoption of laws known as "The Married Women's Acts" have largely abrogated this harsh rule. She may now convey but in some states her deed is void unless her husband joins in it.

Persons who are non-compos mentis, such as idiots and insane persons, may own property but have no legal capacity to convey. This can only be done by a trustee or by a court authorized by law.

Land may be sold under a levy of execution or for delinquent taxes, and such is called a "ministerial sale."

When real estate is sold pursuant to a judgement of court this is called a "judicial sale."

The right of Eminent Domain is the inherent right of a state to take private property for public use upon payment of just compensation to the owner, the amount to be determined according to law. When the public safety or convenience require it the right may be extended by law to individuals or corporations.

A deed of conveyance may contain any restriction or condition not contrary to law or against public policy.

Deeds are made with either General Warranty or Special Warranty. In the former the grantor conveys with the grantee that he owns the property and that he will defend the title against all claims of any persons whatsoever who dispute it.
In a special warranty the grantor only warrants the title against any one claiming by, through or under him and not against all the world.

Quit-claim deeds are used to release such right, title and interest as the grantor may have in and to the lands in question. This form is frequently used to clear a title of an existing cloud upon it or to release encumbrances.

Some states have the "Torrens System" or "Australian System" under which transfers of title to land are made through a public registrar who keeps a record of all titles and issues certificates of ownership to purchasers.

An abstract of title is a brief epitome of the record of a title showing all transfers, mortgages or other liens, judgments, etc., affecting the title.
If the abstract is accurately made a competent attorney, upon examination of it, can see any defects in the title. It is never safe to purchase real estate without having a reliable abstract made and passed on by a good lawyer or having a qualified attorney examine the record and make a report on the condition of the title. If this rule were strictly adhered to much inconvenience and litigation would be avoided. An attorney is responsible in damagfor a mistake made by him in the examination of a title which results disadvantageously to his client. In most localities there are title insurance companies which make a business of examining titles and issuring policies of insurance against any future defects. The premiums are not high and money expended for title insurance is well invested in these days of high priced property.

Let our readers remember that it is always best to consult a reliable lawyer on legal points when property of, value is involved. Always get the facts. It never pays to employ a novice just because he is cheap. He is likely to be too cheap.
Good advice is less costly than litigation. A good legal maxim that lawyers follow is to "always ex-curse an abundance of caution," and this is a good one for the layman to keep in mind.

CHURCH ADVERTISING—THE WHY AND HOW!

C. A. S

The Sunday School

OME would place the Sunday school ahead of the church in the matter of importance to the work of the church because it is from the Sunday school that church members are trained. It is the training school; the period of preparation for active church service, but with these facts in mind, we believe that the Sunday school is secondary to the church because the church is the parent organization and the Sunday school is an auxiliary. Nevertheless, in some respects, it may rank ahead of the church in relative importance, particularly in the minds of the boys and girls. The Sunday school has the same problems that the church has when it comes to the matter of attendance and advertising.

Very few of our Sunday schools take full advantage of the flexibility of their organization. I mean by this that the Sunday school can adapt itself more readily to surrounding conditions, such as type of scholars, such as home conditions of scholars, far more easily than the church. It is a flexible organization and too often this fact is lost sight of, either through a narrow-minded superintendent or the indifference of the leaders of the school.

There should be in every Sunday school an attendance officer or attendance superintendent, or whatever you choose to call him, whose particular duty it is to keep an accurate record of the enrollment of the school and the "weekly" (weekly attendance. Through his office, every absentee should receive a card mentioning the fact that his absence has been noted and that they trust to see him present the following Sundays. Now, I know that in the Sunday school of today, in some churches, they will say, "Oh, we have such a large school that it is impossible to give individual attention." God pity the Sunday school that loses sight of the privilege it has of individual training, and individual contact simply for the sake of numbers. When the Sunday school ceases to function in such a way as to know the individual and look after the individual, then it ceases to be a Sunday school and becomes simply a conclave or convention or even a group of some sort. The Sunday school to survive must look after the individual and must take a personal interest as an organization and as individual leaders of the organization in each attend-

The Sunday school must have as its superintendent a man simply bubbling over with life, ideas, and ideals; a man who loves children; a man who knows children and understands them. Every Sunday school service calls for careful and prayerful study and preparation on the part of the superintendent and his cabinet. I make this charge against the Sunday school and the officers throughout the length and breadth of this great country, ninety-five per cent of the Sunday school services are entered into without preparation. Too many superintendents think all they have to do is to stand in front of the scholars, announce a couple of hymns, have a prayer, make announcements, and take up the study of the lesson. A Sunday school, to be a successful school, must be an organization within the church that at all times expresses through its activities the hopes and aims and ideals and precepts of the church and the Master we all love to serve. And its service each Sunday is so important that it calls for hours of prayer and study and preparation on the part of every officer and official from the superintendent down.

I would suggest that each Sunday be given a particular name, such as one Sunday "Ginger-up Sunday." This would be a Sunday to "pep" them up, get them started off again on a basis of under-

Prof. Galloway's Bible Studies Are Ready!

THE WHOLE BIBLE
For the Whole Year

A Systematic Study of the Whole Bible in Fifty Lessons

By Prof. J. B. Galloway, B. D.

INTRODUCTION AND PLAN OF THE COURSE OF STUDY
(Taken from the Author's Foreword)

These Bible Studies appeared in the Herald of Holiness during the year 1926 by the invitation of its editor, Dr. J. B. Chapman, for the purpose of getting its readers more interested in Bible Study. In order that their usefulness might be enlarged and continued they have been revised and now appear in book form. It is the purpose of the course to stimulate an interest in Bible study and to encourage an intelligent, systematic method of reading and studying the greatest of all books.

The plan of the series will be worked out upon the following outline:

Part I. Assigned readings of the Scripture for each week beginning with Genesis I and consecutively reading the entire Bible in fifty lessons, briefly pointing out key passages to memorize, and thoughts of practical, spiritual, and homiletical value from the assignments, with possible notes or digests.

Part II. The Study of the Bible in General as a Whole.

The Author.

Prof. Galloway's book is so arranged that it can be used to good advantage for individual study or as a basis for group study. This new volume comprises 250 pages and is bound in cloth boards. It should sell for at least $1.50, but we are offering it at the low price of Every Preacher Needs This Book of Illustrations. 349 pages; 1010 illustrations, anecdotes, poetry and prose.

Rev. E. Y. Mullins, D. D., President of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., writes: "I have seen many volumes of sermon illustrations, but I know of none equal in range and variety and forcefulness to the illustrations contained in this collection."

A limited number of volumes at this special price of $1.25.

PULPIT MIRRORS

By Edwin H. Byington, is a unique book for ministers. Turning from traditional methods in homiletics, the author devotes a large part of his book to a study of "specific cases" in preaching. He sets down the results of his observations in more than twenty instances, analyzing the strength and deficiency of the minister in each instance. Attention is devoted to the church service as a whole. Following these studies, the author lays down fundamental principles and proceeds to suggest the methods by which they can be most effectively applied.

THE TOLL OF THE PREACHER'S FOLLY

YESTERDAY a man and his wife told me of a simple experience they had in connection with the ministry of a well known and very useful minister. They had gone quite a distance to hear him preach. In the midst of the sermon a minisit came up. Several ladies left the tent to arrange to keep their vehicles dry. But the preacher misunderstood their purpose and stopped short to say, "That's it, when you set hit you leave." Many years have passed since that, but only recently did this man and woman become adjusted so that they can get blessed under that preacher's ministry.

Three days ago we saw a preacher who was once an active and useful pioneer of the work of spreading scriptural holiness. But he was incessant in labor, made sport of vacations, ate heavy meals late at night, was careless about taking proper exercise and neglected his health in practically every way. Finally his stomach gave way, his nerves went on a tirade, and he has preached but occasionally and that inefficiently now for six or eight years.

A short time ago we met a preacher whom we knew many years ago. He entered the ministry in a young age, was gifted but little intellectual preparation for the work. His natural talents and his white heat-zeal made, his early ministry successful, but he never waked up mentally. As he approached the age of forty it seemed that people were harder to reach and influence with the gospel than they used to be. Many communities were "gospel hardened." At fifty-five this preacher was "on the shelf." His health is reasonably good, his standing as a man is high enough, but as a preacher he is dead because he never learned to study. He died at fifty—died like a tree, at the top first.

A month ago we saw a preacher who is contemplating "a change." And what is more, his church also is "contemplating a change." But it does not seem easy for the preacher to "find a new location." His story is this: he was once a strong, balanced gospel minister. But he took up the reading of speculative books on prophecy and soon decided that he himself had a dispensation on that subject which he was bound to deliver. So he preached on other subjects occasionally, but regularly he preached on prophecy. He preached what he knew and then he preached what he supposed. He preached what he found in the Bible and he preached the theories of men. He preached and speculated and "knew" so many things which turned out to be untrue that the people became suspicious of the things he "knew," even though they were true. Now he is clasped as a "hobbyist," the churches committed to a real gospel program are afraid to install him as leader. He thinks that God is thrusting him out to give his special message to a larger circle of people, and that he will find a place as a sort of "minister extraordinary," a specialized evangelist. But from intimations dropped by pastors of his circle, we gather that pastors and churches generally, when they call an evangelist, prefer a preacher who can "build up all departments of the church."

Six weeks ago we met a preacher who has been from the beginning of his ministry a real "mister." His personality is that of a salesman. In fact, from boyhood his friends have boasted that he "can sell anything." A few years ago he became agent for a "blue sky" investment proposition. He gathered up thousands of dollars from good, religious people who wanted to

NEW BOOKS FOR THE PREACHER

Besides his "working library," which consists largely of reference books, the preacher must establish and maintain the habit of reading good books—old books and new books. Of course there are some books which can be borrowed or read at the public library, but the preacher should own the best books, so that he can read them, mark their striking passages, index their most important references and take them up again when he is fully ready to make use of their best suggestions.

Some books should be read for what they say, others should be read for the way they say it, and each preacher will have to search for his authors, for while recommendations are valuable as leads, they are not dependable as exact guides. One preacher may gain profit from an author while another will find that particular author without value. Some of the authors who are advertised as "preachers' preachers," or "preachers' writers" are adapted to a wide range of preacher types, but even these are not universally adapted.

Most young preachers will find the writings of Dr. A. M. Hill's of special profit on account of their homiletical arrangement. No matter what Dr. Hill writes, he always puts it in proper form for a sermon. His new book of "An Uttermost Salvation" is an example of his style which is quite typical of the man. Boreham should be read for the sake of his quiet eloquence and smooth, flowing sentences.

The preacher must avoid using an author exclusively just because he "enjoys" him. Perhaps he rather needs another whose style and method offend him. Sometimes we fall into an easy, self-plying way of just reading what we like, whereas something we do not really like would be of much more profit to us.

And lest the preacher shall be denied books on account of the scarcity of money, he should early set apart a certain sum or a certain percentage of his income for investment in books. And, if possible, he should establish relationship with a dependable publisher and order notices of the new books sent to him. It has been said that one who does not read will soon cease to be read, and that one who does not hear will soon cease to be heard. The preacher, however, has few opportunities to hear, so he must read in order that he may be heard.

THE SEASON'S SUGGESTIONS

Autumn and the fading leaves and the air of melancholy furnish background for a sermon on old age and death.

In every congregation now there are students who are chafing under the restraints of the first weeks of school, or who are strained by the demands of study and recreation, and these students live in the homes of the other members of the congregation. Now is a good time to preach a sermon on "Fidelity in the Common Places," or "The Rewards of Sincere Application." The national Thanksgiving day will soon be here. It is not too early now to be gathering material and to be making definite plans to make Thanksgiving season a time of blessing in your church. Gratitude is a grace which mothers many another grace which you want people to possess.

Just now it is beginning to feel comfortable indoors, the people are home from vacation and they have not re-established their usual connections of a social nature. Get in ahead this time and have a fall revival and double the enrollment in the Sunday school and get the "prayer-meeting habit" established among your people.

Try a series of three or four sermons on a special line this fall and keep tab on results.

Give the janitor a little fatherly instruction and make your church the most comfortable and best ventilated building in town. Have plenty of thermometers, about and follow the advice of these—you can't please everyone as to the temperature these early autumn evenings, but make some public announcements as to the accuracy and safety of the temperature of your building and this will help the people a lot. If they know things are as they ought to be they will try to adapt themselves.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The sixth of November is election day in the United States. Don't forget to cast your own ballot and to remind your people to do likewise. I plan now to make a trip of almost two thousand miles just to get to vote. Ordinarily we think preachers should take but little active part in politics, but this time (do matter what politicians may say to the contrary) the issue is really the prohibition of the liquor traffic. We have written prohibition into our constitution in this country but the question now is, Shall we nullify or sustain this fundamental law? Perhaps many preachers will make a "calendar" of their own and will at least "make a few remarks" on good citizenship from their pulpits on Sunday, November 4.

And besides election day, there are Armistice day and, in the United States, national Thanksgiving day during November. We urge preachers to make the best use of these special occasions possible. We think it is wise to attempt to project pacific ideas of an unblacked sort and to drift into mere platitudes about our prosperity and many immunities, but it is always in order to preach the gospel of peace and to seek to restore and rewrite the spirit of Thanksgiving and true devotion in the hearts of the people.

The December issue will complete the third volume of The Preacher's Magazine, and we plan to make the fourth volume better and more useful than any of the former volumes have been. Just in three years, we have learned a few things which we believe will be useful to us in making this publication of service to preachers. And every reader can help us by renewing his subscription promptly—a little in advance, if possible. Nearly all of our subscribers take the Magazine for the year and their time expires with the December issue. But if you will send in your renewal immediately it will save the cost and trouble of sending you a notice and it will give us most practical proof that you appreciate our efforts to furnish something helpful to preachers. The Magazine is published at a slight loss to the Publishers, and we want to make their burdens just as light as possible. And it would be a wonderful help if you who now receive the Magazine and like it would secure the subscription of a brother preacher and send it along with your own.
THE CURRENT REVIVAL OF ANCIENT ERRORS

By Basil W. Miller

No. 5. Naturalism in Its Newer Cloaks

THEORY, in the sense of the word, has a constant recurrence of theories which have their bases in anti-supernaturalism. At various stages in the progress of doctrine they appeared, and each time under a new cloak. During the period the theory which held sway, as opposing theism, was termed pantheism. For another era pantheism, defeated as such, was heralded as deism. When modern scientific progress broke forth with such rapidity as the past century has seen it, this same old error found its cloak in the newer view of materialism. Driven from this position, learned men, under the spell of naturalism, held up their hands before the term "Unknown and the Unknowable" of Spencer. It was then known as agnosticism. Allied in more recent times with the scientific theory of evolution, it has made this process to be but an ally of naturalism, or mechanics, under which they were forced to admit the existence of God, speculative theism was but a slight degree better than its former ancestors: pantheism, deism, agnosticism, and possibly mechanistic evolution.

Fundamentally all such erroneous dogmas have the same roots—that of anti-supernaturalism. In our own day this anti-supernaturalism has begotten religious liberalism which denies the supernatural in the Bible, first the Old Testament and then the New. Pantheism, making God to be all, denied His personality. While deism postulated a God, it turned the universe over to the blind mechanisms of inorganic fate, and for all practical purposes God did not exist. Let us then briefly run through the former positions of naturalism, pointing out their fallacies.

Pantheism is in deadly opposition, concerning the universe, to the Christian theory at all points. It denies the cardinal doctrines of Christianity. It eliminates the personality of God, the creation of the universe, the essential freedom of man, the reality of sin, redemption, and of immortality, it makes a phantom. It assumes that the universe and God are one and the same, that they are identical in essence, manifestations and activity. The world is not distinct from God, nor is God distinct from the world. Then the material universe is God, and the only knowable God is the material universe. If God is conceived of as spirit, then we have idealistic pantheism. Materialistic pantheism regards the universe as but the garment through which the eternal spirit, or the animation of the universe, reveals itself, while idealistic pantheism views all particular things, animate or inanimate, as but modes or accidents of one universal substance.

Since such is the doctrine of the world and of God, naturally there can be no creation. All things exist eternally by necessity. Whatever exists is perfect; reality and perfection are identical. There is no such entity as human freedom in nations, individual, nor social organizations; for all things which exist do so by necessity and are constrained to be as they are. Nor is there anything good or bad. This distinction is lacking in any system of fatalism. That which man terms evil, sin, is the offspring of the one substance, God. Hence moral responsibility is denied. This also denies the personality of God. The one on the other hand affirms that God must be a person since man, His offspring, is a person. But pantheism retorts by eliminating the essential personality of man, resolving him into a machine, as a part of the materialistic principle or essence of the universe.

On philosophical grounds pantheism fails, for it cannot explain the existence of life, the mind, the soul, and the innate desire of man to worship a higher power or being. The course of the ages and the mechanism of the universe plainly teach us that desire exists in the substances of the universe, and that the world is not controlled by fatalism. If design exists in the universe and in nature, this demands self-motivation, self-direction, self-will is the World-Ground; but such is the essence of personality. Hence the pantheistic arguments fail, for this primal substance must be personal, or God must be a person.

On moral grounds pantheism fails, for in it there is no adequate foundation for the moral order; for there is no moral governor. Without nominalism the universe is inviolate, we receive, recognize moral distinctions, while pantheism obliterates in every one, and makes God to be the author of sin and immorality. It also robs God and man of freedom, and it carries in its train all the undesirable results of atheism.

Deism, in its mode of regarding God, man, and the universe, differs widely from that of pantheism. Deism studies God as distinct from man and the world, who stands in the relation of each to the other as Creator and creature. It makes God take His place outside of the world, not only distinct from it, but after creation He is practically uninterested in it. After bringing the universe into being He placed it under the control of secondary laws and principles, and excluded Himself from subsequent interferences with the course of nature. While deists affirm the existence of God, they deny the providence of God with reference to the works of creation. The world is to be regarded as a place where consummate wisdom is displayed, but to the ego of the heart of man, God turns a deaf ear. Man is under the rule of unchangeable laws.

The deist must face the fact that finite things alone are responsible. The universe is created and it demands the action of God to keep its intricate mechanism functioning. Laws and principles are not valuable in creating power; they are the descriptions of the manner in which nature acts. Along with this, in the deistic philosophy it is impossible to hold a true doctrine of human freedom, for man in this universe of mechanism becomes a part of the material process, and he too comes under the reign of law. There is also not sufficient motive for religion, for if God does not care for the ego of man, then why should man care for God, and seek to worship Him?

Materialism is the most formidable opponent of the Christian theory of the universe, and is purely naturalistic. Especially when it is allied with the modern theory of evolution, it is in the ascendency in scientific circles. Materialists declare that it is to the interest of science that there should be no God, no supernatural, extra-material entities, and things. They affirm that it is only under this condition that science can reach its goal of perfection. This theory, briefly stated, is that it accounts for nature, life, mind and social organisms nothing more is needed, or wanted than matter, pure and simple. Matter and force have, unaided by any intrinsic power, brought into existence the present universe. The world process is purely the affair of a mechanism. The substitute for God is often termed kyle, matter in its unorganized state. Along with the naturalistic evolutionary theory, then, there is no call for any force outside of matter to develop it.

Even at the point of the origin of life materialism clings to a materialistic modus operandi, spontaneous generation, which all scientists have declared impossible of proof. With this materialism also calls for the transmutation species, which at present is nonexistent. According to the materialists there is no soul; that part of the being is only a bundle of habits. Thought is the result of cerebral stimulations, and consciousness comes from neural adjustments. This theory teaches that the attributes of the soul, which play so large a part in the Christian experience, are the functions and properties of the brain.

There is also an ethereal side to materialism, though religion is utterly impossible on this scale of thinking. Man must be subject to the designless laws of a mechanism. Goodness is resolved into the properties of neurons. Hence either virtue or vice are both without meaning. And religion in terms of the behaviorist is but an emotional stimulation to carry on over biological crises. Materialists affirm that Christianity is the result of the human manipulations of the early Hebrew magicians and priests.

In our brief criticism of materialism it must be charged with being unscientific, though its defenders lay claim to being true scientists. It is usually dogmatic and deductive rather than inductive, studying the facts and from these arriving at conclusions. It makes the universe which is replete with design, to be the result of matter, void and designless. It also causes life to be the offspring of matter. It demands that matter be the parent of thought, emotional reactions, and social sentiments. Its theory of knowledge is unscientific; for it makes all knowledge to be the direct result of that which comes through the senses. Sensational epistemology is unsound psychology, since it gives no ground for such modes of mental reactions as the higher processes of thinking, inventing and imagining.

Materialism cannot justify its assumption that matter is eternal. This it must do in order to make good its case. Between the thesis and the materialist the point of contention is whether spirit or matter is eternal; and the materialist is unable to give a cogent reason whereby he can justify his claim that matter is eternal. Nor can materialism make good its assumption that matter preceded all forms of thought in the point of time. It cannot explain matter from mind by materialism. If psychological materialism—that man has no soul, and mental reactions are the result of neural functioning—were true, it would in no manner follow that ontological materialism and evolution were likewise true, since there might conceivably be a God even though man had no soul. Materialism is unable also to indicate the relation of force to matter, and to give an explanation of the nature of force or energy. Life and mind cannot be explained on the materialistic basis. At present all scientists are forced to agree that life is not the result of spontaneous generation, and that it is not the offspring of matter.

Evolution cannot be passed over in our description of naturalism as a philosophy which is contradictory to theism, or the true philosophy of the universe. Evolution is the child of the last generation; and it, might be said that it is the last attempt of naturalists to present a logical scheme, which, however, is not suited to the facts, and their hypotheses can be verified. Evolution at its basis must remain naturalistic, even though at times it is heralded as theistic in that it can be the action of a God at certain pivotal points. Evolution first explains the material universe in terms pure and simple, from which Life in its lower forms resulted. In an ascending scale it then proceeds to build up the tree of life, starting at the bottom of the rock out of the organic universe, and ranging all the way up to man, through a series of gradations in development which include all the lower forms of life from the amoeba to man. Several unproved assumptions are necessary for the establishment of this naturalistic theory. The first is that matter is eternal. The second is that Life was spontaneously generated. The third is that mind is the child of matter or material reactions. The fourth is that the soul likewise is a product of matter. The fifth is that man has no soul, and all the glory of his mental powers and capacities resulted from the lower order of beasts. This also demands the process of the transmutation of species, from one order into another.

In our hasty review of this hypothesis, suffice it to remark that each assumption is unproved, and is also without the possibility of verification. For a brief analysis of these points, from a naturalistic subject, see, Chapman and Miller, "Evolution Has Failed."

Therm stands over against all naturalistic theories. Its arguments are those which demand the existence of a World-Ground, as the First Cause of the universe and of man; which also demands Personality in this World-Ground, as the Creator of man—who, in his final analysis is personality—and which likewise poohs in this personal World-Ground Holness ruled to the extent of infinity, since this alone answers to the capacity of man to worship. This is termed God, who stands out as an absolute Holy Person, uncreated and unchanging, infinite in His perfections and His attributes. Such a theory alone answers all the facts, and fits into the plan of Christianity.

The newer gods of naturalism are numerous in the present age of doubt of the fundamental verities of Christianity. The outstanding cloak of the present is that of evolution. There is no scheme of evolution which in its final essence is not naturalistic, for it either postulates a materialistic background, or in demanding God for creation of life et al, casts Him aside for naturalistic laws and mechanical second principles. This is dealing of its last and only. When in their claims to be an evolutionist it is well to mark him as a dualist, which theory was well answered by such noble polemists as Butler in his "Analogy," and Paley, in his "Evidences of Christianity." Theistic evolution is a misnomer. If it is evolution, it must be materialistic, and materialism and theism are incompatible, for in the realm of thought they are at opposite poles. Possibly the greatest enemy of Christianity as it is present is evolution. For when once it was proved that materialistic evolution was an impossibility, evolutionists took the theistic side, but still clung to their evolutionary hypothesis. Haeckel, the German materialistic evolutionist, dying on the first of the present century at the age of ninety, was forced to admit that all his colleagues had deserted him in his conflict for naturalism. There are a few outstanding scientists who still class themselves as materialists in their evolutionary views, but the fact that everything is claim to be at least theistic or agnostic in their beliefs on this subject. Where evolution is theistic it makes an appealing theory to the youthful mind that is just being lashed into the Mystical Theories of modern science in our colleges and seminaries. This is, where the danger comes for once evolution saturates the mind of the student and is practically impossible for him to discard himself of such. If once inoculated with this virus, he remains under its spell throughout his days, unless a miracle occur.

An uncituable danger is met in the seminaries where the younger ministers are taught evolution for evolution is difficult to be disassociated from modernism with its anti-supernaturalistic assumptions. For if evolution is true, then the story of creation must be admitted to be without the possibility of scientific verification, and if without scientific verification it is untrue, and if untrue then the entire framework of revelation is likewise untrue and impossible. The result is that there is nothing that man can believe in the Bible as a divine revelation from God to man. Then the Bible becomes as other literature, without a claim to divine inspiration. Jesus is then forced to be deceived in His teachings concerning the Bible as a special revelation of God to the race of mankind. Nothing remains of the Christian system, and our holy religion stands on the same footing as any other religion, either ancient or modern, unfounded in reality. This is the inevitable outcome of the evolutionary hypothesis as it is taught in the seminaries.

Another great appearance of naturalism is that of modernism or religious liberalism. Modernism in its last essence is anti-supernaturalism in revelation; and anti-supernaturalism in revelation forces the religious person to a philosophy as to the origination and function of the material universe as well as of man and his soul. There is no other position to be taken but that of evolutionary theism, which we have shown above to be in direct opposition to naturalistic evolution.

When once modernism makes its inroads into one's thinking it has not finished its work until the last vestige of Christian truth, and theism, is cast aside in favor of a thorough-going naturalism. One can easily find this verified in the writings of modernists, when they will dare state their position concerning the existence of God.

In this scheme modernists are forced to a position of divine immanence, which is but pantheism in another name, or under an assumed name. For divine immanence means that everything is a function of God, that He is a part of all, and is reflected through all the material universe. Those who hold to such a theory at the present time usually do not dare state the final implications of their views.

Naturalism is finding a ready ally in modern science. Biology is under the spell of evolutionary theory; for affirming that the onward development of life is through the evolutionary process, having its starting point in matter. Geology likewise postulates the evolutionary theory to answer the mystery of its discovery of fossils in the rocks of the earth. The science of anthropology and ethnology also traces man back to his cave existence, from thence on back through his lower human stages to that of the apes. Sociology delineates the same history of our ancestors. History starts with the primordial fire and rolls on through the ages until the historic age appears.

Modern psychology is naturalistic. There are two schools of psychology, the introspectionists and the behaviorists, with those of the dynamic theory conciliatory to the two extremes. The first usually treats personality in the traditional manner. While the second speaks of personality as nonexistent, assuming that what we have been accustomed to term personality be but the tangle of neuromat pathways of discharge, or S-R bonds, "stimulus-response connections" in the nervous mechanism. It affirms that consciousness results only from a lack of mental or neural stimuli to the sensory apparatus or the personality in vocational acts, is a bundle of habits. In other words all the behaviorist makes of personality is the nerve, brain and physical basis of the mind. These neural reactions, according to the behaviorist, are the activity of the sensory end organs, following up to the synaptic connections in the higher nerve centers, and on out to the responses in the muscles, are the only type of mental reactions he admits in his naturalistic psychology.

The modern press and pulpits are taking up the naturalistic cry. One cannot take up the average ministerial journal of today without reading of naturalism in theology. It takes on assumed names such as arriving at the historic truth about Jesus, or a barb on the miracles, of the impossibility and futility of inspiration, or one of a score of other similar names and views. Be aware when one begins to question the virgin birth of Jesus, and the resurrection, for he is preparing to criticize the whole system of the atonement by Christ. When one writes of the beautiful influence of the death of Christ, without emphasizing the shedding of his blood in the preparing for the remission of our sins, he is building up the theory of the atonement, which in the past was known as the moral influence theory.
and which today as allied with evolution, naturalism in dealing with the miracles and revelation, and it is entirely materialistic. The road of modernism has been an unequal one. First it started to question the first chapter of Genesis; from the entirety of the Pentateuch, and on to the remaining parts of the historic and prophetic sections of the Old Testament. Then it attacked Jesus and the complete revelation as given in the New Testament with the same vehemence as it did the Old Testament. It all takes its place alongside of the other materialistic theories of life and the universe, as well as of religion, of the past ages. The position of naturalism in the past was usually one without the pale of the Church; but today naturalism has taken its circle within the borders of Christendom. For in the ranks of the ministry, which has heretofore been consecrated to the defense of the Bible and the preaching of salvation through the name of Christ, many of the outstanding naturalists and evolutionists are found. It is not uncommon to hear ministers today decry the faith of their fathers in the Bible as the inspired Word of God, to sneer at the thought of the virgin birth, as well as to mock the miracles of the Bible, and of His own mighty miracle of the resurrection. All this has its rise in German semi-inaries when the higher critical view gained entrance. The essence of the matter is naturalism, which is naturalism. For this view denies the action of God in human history in revealing His will to mankind. This then is the delusive or naturalistic position.

The outstanding danger of this age is that of the spiritualization under assumed names. It has seized our universities and is casting its virulent spell over science, psychology, history and philosophy, which makes it impossible for these studies to be thought of in terms other than materialism. It has crept into our seminaries as a wolf amid the flock of sheep, and has, with its anti-supernaturalism, sapped the faith of the coming ministry in the inspiration of the Bible. It has entered the pulpit and is herein belching forth its poisonous dogmas until they are finding a hold in the thinking of the Christian laity. It has spread its vampiric wings over the press until it is practically impossible to find magazine which do not tend to popularize it. The so-called revivalism of ancient days have ceased to function in the modern church. The Bible is torn from its age-long position of authority in morals and religion. The home has been undermined with its implications that the marriage vow is not binding, since there is no divine standard of purity and morals. All the sacredness of life has been removed, and for it has been substituted the flimsy dogmas of the present age. The mind is absolutely captivated by this modern evolutionary, liberalistic naturalism.

Unless there come a reaffirming of our historic position on the fundamentals of the faith, the inspiration of the Bible, the supernatural power of salvation, the verity of the miracles and the resurrection as well as of the historicity of the Pentateuch and the scientific corroborated and verification of the creation story, the modern church is absolutely doomed to wane and to die. But there comes forth a light of a better day. Here and there are doting the continent semi-naries which still ring true to the Bible. Editors and authors are sending forth streams of holy literature to combat the theory. The hope of the church of tomorrow is found only in such activities.

THINGS THAT ENDURE

Honor and truth and manhood—
These are the things that stand
Though the sneer and gibe of the sly critic
Are loud through the width of the land.
The scoffers may lord it an hour or two,
And a lie may live for a day.
But truth and honor and manly worth
Are things that endure always.

Courage and toil and service—
Old, yet forever new—
These are the rock that abides the shock
And stands through the storm, firm and true.
And folly, the whims of an hour,
May bicker and rant and shrill;
But the living granite of truth will tower Long after their rage is still.

Labor and love and virtue—
Time does not dim their glow;
Though the smart may say, in their languid way,
"Oh, we've outgrown all that, you know!"
But a lie, whatever the guise it wears,
Is a lie and a lie is a lie.
And a truth that has lasted a million years
Is good for a million more!

—Ted Olsen, in Forbes Magazine.
the holiest divines. He became versed in the pagan theologies and philosophies; he acquainted himself with the speculations of the early fathers; he mastered the scholastic literature of the middle ages, and successfully applied his mind to the construction but not the solution of metaphysics. Yet in all his study and literary work, his ministerial duties were not neglected, and his spirituality suffered no declension. On the other hand, his literary pursuits ministered to his advancement in holiness and to his ministerial efficiency. And so will it be with every minister who pursues his studies with the right aim and in the right spirit. ("Pastoral Theology," pages 292-294).

If highly educated ministers are not spiritual (and many are not), it is their own fault, and not the fault of their scholarship. It is their carnal pride of learning, or neglect of prayer, or the rejection of the baptism with the Holy Spirit and sanctification.

We have mentioned Baxter. We think of William Carey, the English colporter, who probably never darkened a court of Deane, was the most self-educated, after having acquired the rudiments of the common school. He worked as a shoemaker until he was twenty-eight years old; preached on Sunday for ten pounds a year; but read, read, read, studied, studied, studied! He was called a "miserable enthusiast" by the chairman of a convention of ministers for suggesting as a subject for discussions, "Is it not our duty to evangelize the heathen nations?" He was the subject of ridicule by the educated clergy of his day, but he preserved. In his thirty-third year he landed in India, November 7, 1793, the first modern English missionary! But he became "the most learned scholar and Bible translator of all the missionaries of Christian history." He labored on eleven grammars, and the translation of the Bible into thirty-six languages of India, and became a prince among the scholars of the ages. When complimented about it, he said, "There is nothing remarkable in it; it has only required perseverance. I have no genius, but I can plod. I can persevere in any definite pursuit. To this I owe everything."

Then there was Charles Spurgeon, who had an academic course but never went to college. Yet few, if any, English clergymen ever sent more money to missions. Spurgeon read so much, for so often quoted. No other man of Christian history ever preached to so many people on one spot of ground as he. But his own private study was his only university, and his professors were the books he read.

It was so with Charles G. Finney, who also never went to college. But he was an incessant student, first of law books, then of the Bible and theology. He read and wrote, pouring out a golden stream of Christian truth through the religious press for many, many years, and many books and a theology that will live long after him. And with all he became "the prince of evangelists," the most successful soul-winner of the ages, and a mighty man of faith and prayer.

Every minister owes it to himself to be just such a student as these four have named. They had the same charge to keep that we have, the same God to glorify, the same responsibility to discharge, the same commission to fulfill. "They magnified their office and made it honorable." They made a noble career for themselves. Why should not we?

Moreover, we owe just such faithful studentship to Him who honored us with our sacred calling. When still only a colporter pleading for missions to which the ministry and the churches were then deaf, William Carey wrote, "A Christian minister is not a man who can justly be said to be in his element; he is not the servant of God, and therefore ought to be wholly devoted to Him. By entering on that sacred office he solemnly undertakes to be always engaged as much as possible in the Lord's work, and not to choose his own pleasure, or employment, or pursue the ministry as a something that is to subserve his own ends, or interests or as a kind of life-work. He engages to go where God pleases, and do or endure what He sees fit to command or call him to in the exercise of his function. He virtuously bids farewell to his friends, pleasures, and comforts, and stands in readiness to endure the greatest sufferings in the work of his Lord and Master. It is inconsistent for ministers to please themselves with thoughts of a numerous auditory, cordial friends, a civilized country, legal protection, affluence, splendor, or even a competency."

Such a conception of the ministry as that would naturally make any man a student and, if God willed necessary, a missionary. In the early days of Methodism there was a young preacher of whom it was said, "You are teachable; he is teachable; he does not have his work done, nor greatly honor God by bearing much fruit for His Lord. John Wesley was deeply concerned about it and wrote him as follows, "Your talent for preaching does not increase; it is about the same, as it was seven years ago; it is lively, but not deep; there is little variety; there is no energy in your voice. Reading aloud can never supply the want of daily meditation and prayer."

"You wrong yourself greatly by omitting this. You can never be a deep preacher without it, any more than you can be a thorough Christian. Oh, begin! Fix on some part of every day for private exercises. You may acquire the taste. As for the prince of evangelists, what is tedious will afterwards be pleasant. Whether you like it or not, read and pray daily. It is for your life; there is no other way, else you will be a trifler all your days, and a petty, superficial preacher. Do justice to your own soul; give it time and means to grow; do not starve yourself any longer." (Quoted by Hogg, pages 295, 296).

But there is another evil effect of unstudiousness in a minister which Wesley did not name. It not only starves him, but starves his flock—starves the souls of the church to which he ministers. Jesus' charge to Peter was "Feed my lambs." "Shepherd my sheep." "Feed my sheep." An unstudious preacher can not long "feed the flock of God" satisfactorily. They want fresh water to drink. Study to know the Bible; to give is stale and musty bread, the left over fragments of other days. A congregation can easily detect when the study is neglected. And, sooner or later, if they are a spiritually self-respecting people, they will resent pastoral indifference, and clamor for a change. If they do not care, then they are all sick from the same disease, struck through and through with spiritual death. This is, oftener than ministers realize, the cause of short pastorates—the fragment diet that unstudious preachers set before their people. Sometimes the people are literally hungering for the bread of life, and the little man who rattles around in the pulpit, but is conspicuous at tea tables and dinner parties, does not know it!

Write it down then as a fact not to be challenged, that a minister must first of all be a real preacher. Horace Greeley, one of America's greatest editors, once said to Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, one of her greatest preachers, "Mr. B.—is a pretty man, a very pretty man, but he does not study, and he has ever had permanent power in this country unless he studies." He power with the people seven days in the week and fifty-two weeks in the years, and ten years in succession, does not come without sweat of brain and intense mental application. Superficiality and repetitions and platitudes and goody-goody exhortations, always indications of weakness, can only be avoided by the incessant reading and study which make a full mind.

An empty-headed, pretty, dapper little fox may be a social success for a season; a ladies' room joining, wire-pulling, joking mixer may go on for a while without brains or sense; but it takes a real man with a trained mind and heart to gain a place and hold for a generation of men by the preaching of "Christ and him crucified." There must be a freshness and diversity and vigor and breadth of treatment, and a many-sided variety of thought to avoid monotony and the perpetual riding of fades and hobbles, which can only come by constant mental application. How a minister could do it, week after week and year after year before the same audience, was to John Bright, the great statesmen of England, "a perfect mystery." But it must be done, or the minister becomes an acknowledged failure.

II. To do all this reading and study there must be a systematic use of time. One of the best lessons learned in college is the ordering of life. Such a time to rise in the morning, devotions, breakfast, study, sermon, lunch, or mid-day meal, exercise, and so forth. System, system, and "a miser of the minutes." A few years of this changes an ignorant youth into a college graduate. After graduation multiplies throw away this excellent habit; but those who succeed and achieve greatness keep it up through life. There should be a schedule to which a man aims. Of course there may be unexpected interruptions to any plan; but these are the exceptions. The plan should be followed as nearly as possible like following the time table by the conductor of a passenger train.

A student studies most successfully when he applies his mind to any given subject at the same time each day. So it will be with a minister who has system about his work. Men greatly differ in mental, and physical characteristics. Each man must learn for himself how to run the most successfully his own machine.

Charles Reade, the famous English novelist, thought that to him a much more important and more permanent stroke was to have his church in the room and his wife sitting in the kitchen. He would stick a man to his church six hours a day was the highest kind of genius. Dr. W. T. Hogg says this, "As a general rule the pastor should spend about five hours a day in his study during five days in the week. And if he be an industrious man he should set apart his Mondays or his Saturdays for mental and bodily rest. By spending a day or two in seven as a day of rest, he will gain time rather than lose it, and will better preserve his health and strength."

Dr. Murphy advises the following order of pastoral work, allowing the pastor in his study from eight o'clock till two, with a recess of one hour; one hour of devotion before breakfast; five hours of study; two hours and a half of visiting; and in the evening one hour and a half for reading and correspondence—ten hours a day for these various duties of the office. (Hogg, "Pastoral Theology," page 303.)

Dr. R. W. Dale of Birmingham, England, had to "harden his heart" and during the morning hours close his study obdurately against intrusion as he grew older. Phillips Brooks tells us "his hours were regular in the later years." Dr. R. S. Steres of Brooklyn, New York, kept his study hours in the morning "as imprecutable as Gibraltar." His ministry lasted over a half century and fifty-four years of it over one church. That meant study and ability and wise behavior.

Calhau's plan was to give nine to one to his study; one to four-thirty for recreation; four-thirty to six for dinner; six to eight for visiting.

eight to eleven for letters and for literature.

Dr. Theodore E. Cuyler: "Study your Bible and other good books in the morning, the door green of pupils of the people in the afternoon. Whatever order you may determine upon remember, "In the morning—solitude" (Pythagoras).

Dr. Pattison in Pastoral Theology writes, "The morning for study; the afternoon for visiting; the evening for services and home.

Dr. Hogg adds: "But studying late at night should be conscientiously avoided by every minister of the gospel" (page 303). To which I say, "Amien and amen." An excited brain unites a man for sleep, ruins his spirits, breaks down his health and shortens his life.

Dr. Albert Barnes wrote his noble commentaries on the Bible before breakfast, beginning at five a.m. But he went to bed as a man should, and got a good night's rest, and lived to a ripe old age.

How much nobler to be such a minister, a student and a worker, leaving after you some monument of your life, than to be a disgrace to your profession, a ministerial loafer and idler, wasting, blighting your life away, and turning over to your Lord at last the unused talent, a barren life in the place of "much fruit," "nothing but leaves!

The Christ of Every Man
There has been much difference of opinion with regard to actual achievement of the Great World Conference on Faith and Order at Lausanne.' Those who fancied expected some plan of union to emerge, some document which, if signed on the dotted line by representatives of all the churches, would miraculously cause the old-age barriers of misunderstanding and prejudice and intolerance to vanish overnight—these have been shocked and disillusioned. Others, usually those who enjoyed the delightful courtliness of the great assembly, representing the best mind and heart of organized Christendom, have brought home a different and more hopeful judgment. They had been profoundly impressed that there was actually existing in the hearts of these men of all the churches a common ideal of Christlikeness and a common loyalty to the central person of the divine Christ, the Savior of the world. They were already one in Christ Jesus, though many and diverse in the earthly mansions which high architects had devised to house their several forms of faith.

Furthermore, it was discovered that the close, contact of minds at Lausanne, when members of traditionally hostile churches and sects mingled, not only in social exchanges, but in the spiritual intimacies of frank statements of inmost experience, had really opened windows in walls that cannot yet be removed or pierced with doorways. No more moving instance of this effect could be given than the following story which Bishop Frederick Fisher of Caltocott, has told to several groups, since his return to India. We reprint it from the Northwest Christian Advocate, which was so fortunate as to receive it from one who heard it told by the bishop himself:

"Bishop Fisher was chairman of one of the group meetings which was to discuss the sacraments.

"The first to speak was a venerable Greek priest, eighty-three years old. Garbed in all his churlishly vestments, he arose and said, "To me the very thought of discussing the question of sacramental grace is impious and sacrilegious, the more so because we are in an un consecrated church (Greek Protestant). Why, this sacrament (Lord's Supper) is so holy that it ought to be observed only in a church truly consecrated by priests who have come right down from Peter. The priest officializing should be to the apostolic succession, for only so will the bread become the body of our Lord and the wine His Blood. Only by sacramental grace can we find Jesus Christ. When the church, the table, the chalice, the bread and wine are truly consecrated by a priest, then, and then only, does the bread no longer remain bread, but as we take it into our mouth we carry the living, throbbing Jesus between our teeth. Then the wine becomes His warm, pulsating blood. Why, in winter when the wine is cold, after its consecration, it is merely 'the warm Blood of Jesus, so warm that we priests can warm our cold hands by touching the chalice containing His warm, pulsating blood. There is only one way to find and see and feel and know Jesus Christ, and that is through His holy sacraments. That is another way or even to discuss it in this church is sacrilege.'

"As he spoke Bishop Fisher said that his eyes burned. Only once before had he seen eyes burn like that. They were the eyes of a socialist in France who denounced the church, but with burning eyes cried out, 'But you can't take our Christ away from us. He is ours, too.' Both men spoke with such deep conviction that their eyes burned and burned.

"The archbishop had presented the extreme sacramentalist view. His age, his dignity, his deep conviction made a great impression, and though most of the sixty men present differed with him, the atmosphere was such a man of fact and deep spiritual daring to speak."

A Quaker arose. In appearance he was rather insignificant, but he was equal to the occasion.

"He began: 'I would not rob the bishop of his faith. Neither dare I rob you and the world and myself of my faith. As you know, we do not emphasize the sacrament, and even when occasionally we partake of it we take it from hymnbook's hands. The bishop has found Christ through the sacrament. I have not, but I have found Him. Why, last night as I was walking these streets, meditating and praying, I was not alone—the Man of Galilee was at my side, walking and talking with me. As this morning I knelled in morning devotions and looked out across the lake I could see the Christ walking across it, as He did across another lake years before. He came into my room, into my heart; He came to this meeting with me, and Jesus Christ is as real and living to me here and now as you are. Jesus is as truly present with me in this room as the bishop is present. For years Jesus has been a living, radiant personality with me. I have not found Him through the sacraments, but I have found Him.'

"The next day this archbishop came to Bishop..."
The Better Way
Who serves his country best?
Not he who, for a brief and stormy spate,
Leads forth his people at the force of arms. he force of arms.
Short the torrent of turmoil and unrest,
Long years of peace succeed it and replace;
There is a better way.

Who serves his country best?
Not he who guides her senators in debate,
And makes the laws which are her prop and stay;
Not he who wears the poet's purple vest,
And sings her songs of love and grief and fate;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best
Who joins the tide that lifts her nobly on;
For speech has myriad tongues for every day,
And song but one; and law within the breast
Is stronger than the gravest law on stone;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best
Who lives pure life, and doeth righteous deeds,
And walks straight paths, however others stray,
And leaves his footprint set in standards fair,
A stainless record which all men may read:
This is a better way.

A Liquor Man's Advice
W. E. Broderick of Baltimore, retiring president of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, was asked by a young man, "Mr. Broderick, I want your opinion as an expert. What is the best kind of whiskey to drink?"

Broderick looked at him gravely. "My boy," said he, "the answer to that is dead easy. The best drink of whiskey to take is none at all.

Why Men and Women Ought to Go to Church
There are at least five different reasons why each individual ought to go to church,
1. To worship God. Our God is worthy of our worship.
2. To be instructed. Unless horribly conciliated, there is something for each of us.
3. To be comforted. We have our petty troubles, and deep sorrows, the church will help you to forget these.
4. To get new impulse. Both morally and religiously, we are all like stoves radiating heat, and bound to get cold unless a fresh supply of fuel is furnished.
5. To help maintain the church. The church, with all its imperfections, is the best institution in the world. It is worthy of the support of every man.

As Thy Days
"As thy days, so shall thy strength be" (Deut. 33:25).

Do thy weary footsteps falter,
Does the path seem steep and hard,
Does all hope of victory flee?
And fly home to thy reward?

Lift thy heart in holy courage,
Let thy faith the promise see,
For His good word never faileth:
"As thy days thy strength shall be."

Weak and faint, does life seem ebbing,
Does all hope of victory flee?
Fear not, O beloved voter,
"As thy days thy strength shall be."

Does the mountain path grow rougher?
Still the Lord hath need of thee;
He hath trod the steep of Calvary;
"As thy days thy strength shall be."

Does the tempest beat more fiercely?
Still shall stand His blest decree,
All the waves shall not overwhelm thee;
"As thy days thy strength shall be."

Hush thy heart in sweet abiding,
Let all doubt and sorrow flee;
Sink to rest upon His bosom,
All His strength shall be for thee.

But we see Jesus
"While we look, not at the things which are seen" (2 Cor. 4:18). "But we see Jesus" (Heb. 9:2).

I don't look back; God knows the fruitless efforts,
The wasted hours, the sinning, the regrets
I leave them all with Him who blots the record,
And mercifully forgives, and then forgets.

I don't look forward; God sees all the future,
The road that short, or long, will lead me home,
And He will face me with its every trial,
And bear for me the burdens that may come.
But I look up—into the face of Jesus,
For there my heart can rest, my fears are stilled;
And there is joy, and love, and light for darkness,
And perfect peace, and every hope fulfilled.

Facts and Figures about Marriage and Divorce

Marriage in the United States increased 1.2 per cent during 1926 as compared with 1925, while divorces increased 3.1 per cent, for the same period, according to a report issued by the Department of Commerce. The figures made public by the department reveal that there were 1,202,070 marriages in this country during 1926, and 1,183,334 in 1925. The relative increase was somewhat less than the estimated increase in the population, which amounted to 1.5 per cent, according to the figures. There were 186,668 divorces granted in the United States in 1926 as compared with 175,449 in 1925, representing an increase of 4,919, and 3,823 marriages were annulled in 1926. The estimated population of the United States on July 1, 1926, was 117,136,000 and on July 1, 1925, 115,378,000. On the basis of this estimate, the report says, the number of marriages per 1,000 of the population was 10.26 in 1926, as compared with 10.30 in 1925. The number of divorces per 1000 of the population was 1.54 in 1926, as against 1.52 in 1925.
"He is a very successful preacher," I am told. "See how his church is filled every week." Not necessarily so. He may be a good advertiser, a good promoter. But "he must be a very successful preacher. See how the people listen to him, how they devour every word." Still, the suggestion is often taken with caution. The alleged "preaching success" may be only a great entertainer. He might even be a great fraud! Ratterer, is not this the test: Do people take seriously, his Christian message, and commit themselves in the Christ and His standard of living? To what other end shall a man preach? What other legitimate motive shall move him? What shall profit him, in the sight of his Lord, if he speak to a packed church and the people do not take him seriously? When is a salesman effective? When he sells, his goods. When is a lawyer effective? When he wins his case. When is a doctor effective? When he saves his patients from curable disease. When is the Christian prophet effective? When his preaching wins souls to the Lord in Christ and to a dedication to the Christian way of living.

The Church of the Nazarene, first, last, and all the time is an evangelistic agency. The preacher in a Nazarene pulpit who has gone out of the soul saving business, has mistaken his calling, and sad to say, has lost his way. We doubt if he has a place among us.

The preacher in the Church of the Nazarene, must be decidedly more than an entertainer, more than an orator, more than a scholar, more than a house-to-house visitor; he must be a soul-saver, able to move men to God. His activities, generally speaking, must converge at this one point. He, of necessity must be a man of prayer and carry a burden for the lost. Thus will he promote evangelism, and his ministry will be truly effective.

Wanted for Our Country
In our progressive newspapers there are columns of wants advertised so as to catch the attention of heads of families, professional men and women, merchants, clerks, housekeepers, mechanics, laboring men, in short, men and women of all sorts of occupations so that they may gain for themselves and for their loved ones or for those needing their interest care the helplessness intended. There are also family needs, municipal needs, state needs, national needs, world-wide needs. Nothing should more deeply interest the mind and heart of a true patriot than the consideration of our national needs. If we could get the attention of citizens, especially Christian citizens, centered on what might be a source of inspiration for good government we would publish far and wide a list of various kinds of desirable men and women who are ready to take up the work of God in America. When a great national need is presented it has been the custom for the Church to rally at once.

Wanted for Our Country—
1. Men like Enoch and Noah, of each of whom it is said, "He walked with God" (Gen. 5:22; 6:9).
2. Men like Daniel—not dazed by royal splendor, nor purchased with princely gifts, but courageously consecrated to the service of God whether with one's own people or as a faithful counselor or in a foreign land; men of prayer who will faithfully acknowledge in public as well as private, their allegiance to the Lord of lords and kings, and so conduct themselves under all circumstances as to win the approbation of the heavenly Father (Dan. 6:24; 5:17-61:28).
3. Men like Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego—men who are God's own servants valiant for truth, courageous for the duties of conscience, relying solely on the Almighty's promised aid (Ex. 20:4, 5; Dan. 3:4-30).
4. Men in authority like Nehemiah—wise, strong, brave, determined to antagonize all evil, and boldly to stand up for the right, a terror to all evil doers (Neh. 13:4-9).
5. Men like the apostle Paul—resolved to follow the guidance of the Holy Spirit, come weal or come woe (Acts 24:16; 1 Cor. 2:1, 13).
6. Men like the Bereans—students of the Bible, those who will "Search the Scriptures" (John 5:39), because "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16, 17).
7. Young men like Jabez—those desiring and praying to the loving Father that they may live uprightly (1 Chron. 4:9, 10). "Young women like gracious Ruth—those who will give up, if necessary, home, country, customs and anything else just to be identified with the people of God (Ruth 1:16; 17; 2:11, 12). Would that the light-hearted and lighter-minded "flappers" of the present day might study the book of Ruth in the Old Testament!

Matrons like the virtuous Shunammite (2 Kings 4:8-37), or like Abigail (1 Sam. 25:2-33); those who use their God-given minds to act with good common sense (too uncommon at the present time).

Fathers like Abraham, called the friend of God (2 Chron. 20; Isa. 41:8). What greater honor, yea, what honor so great as to be called the Friend of God by the women Brothers like Aaron and Hur who stood by and helped Moses in his great struggle with the Amalekites (Ex. 17:9-12).

Sisters like Mary and Martha—ever ready to serve. Jesus and listen to his instructions (Luke 10:38, 39; John 12:2, 3).

Men like Jeremiah, cheerfully obedient and faithful (Jer. 13:1-10).

Heads of families like Caleb (Num. 14:24), and Cornellus (Acts 10:2, 33).

Wives like the one described in Proverbs 31:10-11.

Mothers like Hannah who will train up their children for God's service (1 Sam. 1:10, 11; 24:28; Prov. 22:6).

Maidens who will speak for God (1 Kings 5:16; Prov. 15:23).

Followers of Christ like Barnabas (Acts 11:22-26; 9:27; Gal. 6:2, 1 Thess. 5:14).

With such men and women aiding and controlling in the home, in the community, in the city, in the state, in the nation, our influence as a people at home and in the family of nations would be world-wide for the uplifting of humanity and the bringing to pass the universalism of the kingdom of God. Then as true, patriotic Americans will we be doing what we can to answer the petition, so often made daily in private devotions, at the home altar and in the house dedicated to the worship of God—"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," Yea, verily, the above-mentioned instances of world-wide fame and probity are such as are always wanted in our Country—J. Harry Drexel in The Watchman-Examiner.

About His Father's Business
Gamaliel Bradford, in his new life of D. L. Moody, recalls a story that President Wilson used to tell about going into a barber shop one day where Mr. Moody was being attended to and incidentally was talking to the barbers. Apparently Mr. Moody was, as usual, improving his opportunities. Woodrow Wilson thus describes the extraordinary effect of Mr. Moody's conversation: "I purposely lingered in the room after he left and noted the significant effect his visit had on the barbers in the shop. They talked in undertones. They did not know his name, but they knew that something had elevated their thought. And I felt that I left that place as I should have left a place of worship."

The Bible not Read by Many
The Bible is the greatest book in the world. When read for spiritual profit it cannot be surpassed. It would seem that there are literally thousands both young and old who never scan the pages of this wonderful book. To neglect to read the Bible is a loss irretrievable.

Viscount James Bryce said a few years ago, "It is with great regret that one sees in these days that knowledge of the Bible seems declining in all classes of the community. I was struck with the same thing in the United States. Looking at it from the educational side, the loss of knowledge of the Bible and all that the Bible means would be incalculable to the life of the country. It would be a great misfortune if generations of children grew up who did not know their Bible."

Great is he that is with us
However difficult the task, and however slow the progress that we are making we need not fear. We need not tremble at any kind of opposition. Said the Burgomaster of Hamburg to Mr. Draken, the founder of the German Baptists, "Do you see that little finger? As long as I can move that finger, I will put down the Baptists." Draken replied, "Yes, I can see your little finger, and I also see a great arm that that little finger cannot see. As long as the great arm of God is lifted in our behalf, your little finger will have no terror for us."

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST
By C. E. CORNELL

"Watch." "Blessed is he that watcheth." Rev. 1:3.

Some General Propositions
1. Jesus himself said that He would come again; the angels said that He would come again, "in like manner." The Holy Spirit, by the mouth of the apostles, said that He would come again.
2. The burden of the message of the apostles was the second coming of Christ. They lived on tip-toe expectancy of His coming.
3. It is an admitted fact that the faith of the early Church rested on the second coming of Christ and His millennial reign. This is confirmed by the attitude of Luther, Melanchthon, Meade, Milton, Burnett, Isaac Newton, Watts, Charles Wesley, Toplady, and a host of others.

Since the year 1300 the Church has gradually drifted from her teachings regarding the second coming of Christ, until now the general Church is not concerned with the subject of His return.

5. As the Church wanes in spiritual power, there is less and less concern about His coming. On the other hand, where there are individuals deeply spiritual, they invariably are looking for the return of Jesus.

There are two schools of general views named: pre-millennial Christians and post-millennial Christians. The pre-millennialists adhere to the doctrine that the millennium is to be introduced by the personal, visible return of Christ. The post-millennialists believe as a tenet that Christ's second coming will follow the millennium. The post-millennialists call attention to the fact that prophecies were literally fulfilled at His first coming, and maintain that prophecies will be literally fulfilled at His second coming.

THE CHISTIAN'S SLAVERY
By A. M. HILL

Text—Rom. 6:18, 10, 22 (R. V.). "Being made free from sin [the sin principle] ye become the servants of righteousness." (v. 19). For ye are not your own, because ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit which is God's. (v. 20)." But now ye are made free from sin [the sin principle] and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto sanctification, and the end eternal life. (v. 21).

The word translated "servants" means bond-servants or slaves (see R. V. margin).

I. Notice, the moral law we live in servitude is voluntary. Sinners are not servants or slaves to uncleanness by compulsion; it is voluntary. So now the good are not forced to be holy. They are voluntary slaves of righteousness.

God has not unwillingly made us Paul said, "whom I am, and whom I serve." II. True Christians become the "love-slaves of God." Paul said, "The love of Christ constraineth us." They are wholly submitted. They cheerfully recognize Jesus' right to them. They were bought by His precious blood. (v. 22).

3. "Governed by His will, "Thy will be done!"

4. Supported by His grace. "No good thing will be withholden!"

III. They are made free from the sin principle. Sixteen most scholarly commentators tell us that Manesias in the singular number with the name "the" before it, in our text means the sin principle, or the old man, the carnal mind, depravity. So there is no Reckwic doctrine of "necessary and continuous sin." In our text. God provides perfect deliverance from it (verses 18, 22). "Salvation is to the uttermost" (Heb. 7:25). Rom. 8:2, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law [uniform tendency] of sin (the sin principle).

1. No scripture justifying or "wrestling" or "perverting" can make the Greek of these texts mean other than they plainly teach. Paul had obtained deliverance from the sin principle and we can too.

1. Free from the guilt of actual sins in the past, and the penalty.

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON
By C. E. C. Cornell

I. THE PERSECUTION OF THE EARLY CHURCH
1. They were scattered
2. Larger territory reached
3. More persons heard the gospel

II. GOD DO NOT ALWAYS INTERPOSE TO DELIVER HIS PEOPLE
1. James, Stephen, Christ himself.
2. God knows better than we.
3. To be patient is not always to be patient.

III. PRAYER OF THE CHURCH
1. Earnest; 2. Definite; 3. United;
4. Unceasing; 5. Believing,

The miraculous deliverance.

The ministry of angels.

Many are kept up in sin and sinful practices, earnest prayer will deliver them.

THE BOOK OF ROMANS
By C. E. C. Cornell

Text—Rom. 8:1, 2; 28, 35-39.

INTRODUCTION
Paul, the writer. His masterful mind. The Book of Romans is a book of climax. Thrice, eighteen, in the 8th chapter:
1. No condemnation. Rom. 8:1, 2.
2. No revelation. Rom. 8:8.

No Condemnation
The marked change. The exceeding sinfulness of sin. The great deliverance. Following the Spirit.

No Rejection
Our wills swallowed up in the will of God. Saved from the petty annoyances of life.

Illustration: Matt. 5:36-64.

No Separation
The glorious achievement of a faithful life. Who can separate?

Only the individual
God helps us to hold fast. Thus our crown is sure.

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT—JOY
By C. E. C. Cornell

Text, Gal. 5:22, 23.

I. LOVE AND JOY TERNSDIVED
Love is the mistress of both joy and sorrow.
1. Love wronged.
2. Love triumphant.

“The lover of mankind was a man of sorrows, etc., whose love bared it’s breast to the arrows of scorn and hate; and yet for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame.”

No sorrow like Christ rejected. No joy like Christ risen and reigning.

II. ALL FORK IS ON THE HEART OF JOY
1. Selfishness.
2. Unbelief.

III. JOY RAISES THE WHOLE TEMPERATURE OF THE HEART.
1. It affects the emotions.
2. It lightens the burdens of life.
3. It makes the countenance.
4. It gives an elastic step.
5. It puts life in the voice.

Note: The ebb and flow of joy. Why?

IV. THE SOURCE OF JOY IN THE “FULNESS OF THE BLESSING.”
A happy experience—catching. Its effect upon others.

GREAT TEXTS OF THE BIBLE
By Basil W. Miller

"The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity" (Mal. 2:8). Theme, The Characteristics of God's Man. (This is Bunyan's, text—preaching the truth, living the life, and saving the lost.)

"Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?" (Songs of Sol. 6:10). Theme, The Church of Christ.

"And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars" (Rev. 12:1). Theme, The Triumphant Church. (Clothed with the righteousness of Jesus, conqueror over the rulers of darkness, apostolic glory.)

"But ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that ye may show forth the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light" (1 Pet. 2:9 R. V.). Theme, The Royal People of God.

"Make me thereof a little cake first" (1 Kings 17:12). Theme, The Priority of God's Claims.

"As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak" (1 Kings 22:14). Theme, The Mouthpiece of God.

"And the Lord appeared again in Shishlam" (1 Sam. 3:21). Theme, The Revival of God's Presence.

"And she bound the scarlet line in the window" (Josh. 2:21). Theme, Hide Under the Blood.

"There is an assured thing in the midst of thee" (Josh. 7:14). Theme, Beware of the Worker of Gold.

"So Saul died for his transgression" (1 Chron. 10:13). Theme, The Last Act in the Drama of Sin.

"What is man, that [Hebrew when] thou art mindful of him?" (Psa. 8:4). Theme, The Glory of Man.

"As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone" (1 Kings 20:40). Theme, The Confessions of a Failure.

"Many went back and walked no more with him" (Jno. 6:66). Theme, Turning away from Christ.

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 2:5). Theme, The Mind of Christ.

"Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things have passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17). Theme, The Transforming Power of Christ.

HOW SHALL WE ESCAPE, IF WE NEGLECT—" (Heb. 2:31). The Wreckage of Negligence.

"Her Nazarites were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphires; their visage is blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets: their skin cleaveth to their bones; it is withered, it is become like a stick" (Lam. 4:7). Theme, Fallen Nazarites.

"But now they have no cleft for their sin" (Jno. 15:22). Theme, Cocks for Sin.

"Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations" (Psa. 90:1). Theme, The Saints' Glorious Habitation.

MORE FAMOUS PICTURES OF LIFE
Text: "What is your life?" (Jas. 4:14).

Introduction: The Bible an art gallery, each writer a painter with words. Jesus the master painter—his masterpiece is the Prodigal Son. Paul as a word painter—drawing the soldier in the Lord's warfare. Let us consider some more famous Bible masterpieces of life.

1. Life drawn as a battle—"Fight the good fight of faith" (1 Tim. 6:12). Paul paints the scene of the Christian soldier in the arena ready to battle with the powers of darkness. Preparation is the helmet of salvation, breastplate of righteousness, etc. In the amphitheater are the onlookers. Life is a battle against the world without its allurements, temptations—against the foes within the heart. Finally a battle acquisitively waged against the hosts of sin. Fighting under the banner of Immanuel.

2. Life drawn as a rest—"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God"—rest for the soul from the clashing ills of iniquity. Life is waiting—"They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength—they shall mount up with wings as eagles"—waiting for renewed soul power and divine strength with which to mount above the ill. Life is dwelling—"He that dwelteth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty"—dwelling in the refuge eternal, dwelling in the strong tower of safety.

Conclusion: Soul, live thy life to the highest extent of the possibilities of God for thee. Every picture herein drawn is attainable. If thus one lives, he shall inherit the "crown of life."

THE COMING GLORY
Text: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9).

Introduction: (Rightly applied this refers to the revealed mysteries of the Spirit given to the soul—but in a broader sense it refers to the glories of the coming age.) Draw a scene of natural beauty as leading up to the thought of the text. Paint the glories of mountain scenery, etc. The crowning height of Mt. Shasta. Rainier Park carpeted with flowers, the rushing Niagara Falls.

1. COMING GLORY SURPASSES ALL THE EYE HATH SEEN. Draw a picture of what the eye of man hath seen—luminous paintings, glorious landscapes, and all the world of nature and art bold of grandeur. This is incomparable to the glories of the heavenly land—the jeweled walls, the golden streets, the river of life, the majestic scene of the heavenly review; the wondrous face of the Master, etc. The crowning of the Master as Lord of All.

2. COMING GLORY SURPASSES ALL THAT THE EAR HATH HEARD. Picture again what the ear hath heard—glorious music of nightingale singers, voices of departed holy saints in meditation, the eloquence of the pulpit, Wesley, Whitefield, Mor- rision, etc. Sweet words that fall on sinner's ear of pardon—tender words of mothers—shaming words of patriotism. The coming glory towers supremely above all this—the angelic host in celestial harmonies, of divine praise—redeemed saints with voices attune to redemption—the harps of heaven and the musicians that no man can number—the voice of holy saints and patriots—the singing of the incorruptible David, the Psalms, the songs of the Church of God, the Florence Nightingales, etc.

3. COMING GLORY SURPASSES ALL THAT HATF TOUCHED MAN'S HEART. His soul has been stirred by holy emotions, thrilled by purity, aroused by tender sympathies, inflamed by love, touched by the newness of divine life. Campering scenes where the saints are aroused by sweeping of holy emotions. Heavenly glories for the soul more wondrous than these, the communion, the joy of being eternally redeemed, the last battle past, pain forever defeated, death the last enemy conquered.

Conclusion: Contrast the light allusions of the present with the incomparable glories to be revered—today's battle with heaven's eternal crown and rewards.

The Desert Lodging Place

Text: "Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place for wayfaring men..." (Jer. 9:2).

Introduction: Draw out the picture of wanderers, the desert trails, men lost and alone, and men lost who have been found in the desert or the mountains.

1. For Wayfaring Men. All unsaved men are lost in the desert of life, and are wayfaring, without a place of soul rest.

2. In the Desert Wilderness. Life is a wilderness of sin, a barren waste of trouble, a land without a lodging place for the soul. It is a land by blasting winds of passion, burned with the unquenchable fires of hatred and jealousy, etc.

3. A Lodging Place. Salvation is a lodging place, a habitation of safety, a shelter from the blasting winds and the blowing sands of sin. Christ gives to wayfaring men all that a lodging place in the wilderness affords to them.

Conclusion: An application to lost men who now hear the voice of God calling, who now wander in the desert of sin as a prodigal in a far-off country. Seek now this lodging place, this dwelling place in the shadow of the Almighty. Turn now, for why will ye die?

The Canaan Experience

Text: God's numerous promises to Abraham to give him the land of Canaan as an eternal inheritance.

Introduction: Canaan as a type of the experience of holiness—might in battle, rich in glory, achieved by faith and consecration—God's will for man.

1. An Established Life. "He brought us out, that he might bring us in" (establish us) (Deut. 6:21).

2. A Conquering Life. "To cast out all things enemies from before thee" (freedom from soul enemies) (Deut. 6:19).

3. A Holy Life. "This shall be the Lord thy God and serve him" (complete consecration to God's will) (Deut. 6:23).

4. A Gifted Life. "To give thee great and goodly cities" (rich in soul possessions) (Deut. 6:10).

Conclusion: The victories, battles, blessings, and glories of Canaan prefigure those of the sanctified life. For the wandering soul holiness is as glorious as Canaan for the wilderness wandering Israelites, and as majestic.

ILLUSTRATIVE MATERIAL

Compiled by J. Glenn Gould

In the Image of God

One summer night around a camp-fire in the mountains, after two hours of merry jest and song, our old negro cook came out of his tent and standing with the lights and shadows, he begged permission to ask a question. We were a company of preachers holding a Bible conference with the mountainmen. Our cook in his early youth had been a slave in Virginia and was still proud of the traditions of his family. Six feet in height, straight as an arrow, with swarthy, chiseled features and the air of a Chesterfield, the old negro made a picture as he stood there in the flickering light of the camp-fire, his big form and dark features silhouetted against the darker night.
We told him to ask on. As he began to speak in low, tense, earnest tones, another atmosphere fell around the camp. Instead of merriment and laughter, we were face to face, with a soul grooping for light and seeking for signs of kinship with God.

The old negro had been pondering the opening chapters of Genesis and said he had noticed a difference between the way God made the world and the way He made man. In making the world God used His power; in making man God used Himself, His life, His breath; and the old man's anxiety was to know if he was right in the conclusion that God, in the very act of creation, had made him akin to the Deity. He was voicing, not only the cry of his own life and of his oppressed and neglected people for some bond that would tie them to an eternal hope, but the cry of the race for God.

The text that was the most urgent in that old negro's question asked that night around the mountain camp-fire. Its reply to the soul's deepest inquiry is a great affirmation.—James I. Vance, D. D.

The Spirit of the Cross

A highly intelligent man told me how he saw the cross and was redeemed. He had a beautiful, intelligent and innocent-minded wife. He was true to her until he went to Europe, but there he took his first mistype. He continued the secret unfaithfulness after he came back to India. The innocence and the trust of his wife often stabbed him like a knife. Then came the crisis when he knew he would have to tell her. He dreaded it. He was afraid that her anger would wither him, and that she would leave him. He told her the whole shameful story. He said, 'I can never forget the look of anguish that came over her face as the meaning of what I had done dawned upon her. She turned pale and clutching at the pain in her heart she sank upon the bed. I could see the tears in her eyes, and I expected the storm to break on me, but instead she said, 'I love you still and I will not leave you.' Then I saw in the anguished love of my wife the meaning of the cross. I was a redempee man from that hour.' And his subsequent life has shown it.—E. Stanley Jones, D. D.

Subject to Like Passions as we are

Elijah had a heavenly name; but he had to begin with an earthly nature. He was a man, to begin with, 'subject to like passions as we are.' Elijah was a man indeed of passions 'all compass.' We never see Elijah but he is in a passion, as we say. In a passion of anger at Ahab. In a passion of scorn and contempt at the priests of Baal. In a passion of fury and extermination against all idolatry, and again all organized uncleanliness. In a passion of prayer and intercession. And, once for all, Elijah is flesh and blood, and not stone and iron—once in a passion of despondency and melancholy under the juniper tree. Elijah was a great man. There was a great mass of manhood in Elijah. He was a mountain of a man, with a whirlwind for a heart. Elijah did nothing by halves. What he did, he did with all his heart. And what a heart it was, the most generous, the most loving, the most kind; he, among us, who has the most manhood; he, among us, who has the most passion in his heart—"the most love and the most hate; the most anger and the most meekness; the most scorn and the most contempt; the most humility and the most honor; the most fear and the most faith; the most melancholy and the most sunny spirit; the most agony of prayer, both in his body and in his soul, and the most victorious assurance that his prayer is already answered before it is yet offered—that man is the like of us all to Elijah, and that man has Elijah's mantle fallen upon him.—Alexander White, D. D.

Man's Eternal Spirit

Victor Hugo says, 'I feel in myself the future life. I am rising, I know, toward the sky. The sunshine is over my head. Heaven, lighted with the reflection of unknown worlds. You say the soul is nothing but the result of bodily powers; why then is my soul the more luminous when my bodily powers begin to fail? Winter is on my head and eternal spring is in my heart. The nearer I approach the end, the plainer I hear around me the immortal symphonies of the worlds which invite me. It is marvelous, yet simple. It is a fairy tale and it is a history. For half a century I have been writing my thoughts in prose, and in poetry, drama, romance, tradition, satire, ode, song—I have tried all. But I feel that I have not said a thousandth part of what is in me. When I go down to the grave, I can say like so many others, I have finished my day's work. But I cannot say, 'I have finished my life.' My day's work will begin the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley. It is a thoroughfare. It closes in the twilight to open in the dawn. I improve every hour because I am my fatherland. My work is only beginning. My work is hardly above its foundation. I would be glad to see it mounting and mounting forever. The thirst for the finite proves infinity.'

Pray without Ceasing

James, the brother of the Lord, and the author of this Epistle (of James), was nicknamed "Cameel hearts" by the early Church. James had been so slow of heart to believe that his brother, Jesus, could possibly be the Christ, that, after he was brought to believe, he was never off his knees. And when they came to collin him, it was like confining the knees of a camel rather than the knees of a man, so hard, so worm, so stiff were they with prayer, and so unlike any other dead man's knees they had ever called."— ALEXANDER WEYDEN, D. D.

Desiring Original Sin
A Gay pulpit, in his effort to ridicule the doctrine of original sin, mightfully depicts the sorrow of a solemn devotee, who mournfully reclines the decay of religion by saying: "They have taken away our eternal punishment, and they threaten to take away our original sin, and directly nothing will be left for our souls to feed upon."
That sounds funny; but, when one reflects, it is neither funny nor clever. There is a coterie of rose-water poets and novelists who dip their pens in mist and write nonsense. Their mission in life is to make virtue as homely and vile as attractive as possible. They are dead set against original sin. They regard the sinner as an accident and the criminal as a victim. Their esthetic temperaments effect a severe shock when confronted with the conditions of so horrible a disease as is the honeycomb or rancam. They are the apostles of the fog and their creed is to believe nothing that fails to please.
What is to be said of this? Are we to make a new creed that leaves out original sin? Paul preached original sin. Was Paul wrong? August-tine preached original sin. Was Augustine mistaken? John Calvin and John Knox preached original sin. Were their intellects infirm?
Is the Bible wrong on this subject? If so, can one believe that it is right on any subject? If it be astray from the facts in what it says about the origin of sin, may it not be as far astray from truth in its teachings about pardon, salvation, hope and heaven?—JAMES I. VANCE, D. D.

Microscopic Beauty
Prof. H. S. Ficke of Harvard University, says,
"It was my good fortune to do some work in the botanical laboratory of the University of Wisconsin a few years ago. What interested me most of all was the fact that some of the most beautiful structures in plant life are hidden from the unaided eye. Here is a thin green strip of vegetation taken from the quiet waters of Lake Mendota. We place it under the compound microscope, and we see revealed the most beautiful of spirlals, all the wonderful structure of the Spirea rosea. We have seen pollen, the yellow dust of the blossom. If we place a single grain under the microscope, we shall be filled with wonder and surprise at the beautiful design with which Nature has adorned this grain of dust.
And, if we look at other particles of pollen, we shall see a variety of forms, all manifestations of the thread of beauty which runs through the entire universe."
I will give you a Mouth and Wisdom
When the Rev. George Hoad was about to leave for Africa for the first time, he made a farewell visit to an old colored manny who lived in Swamppondle, now part of Philadelphia.
He expressed to her his feelings of inadequacy for the task before him, to which the old colored saint replied, "Sonny, you can't hold much, but you can split lots."—The Christian Advocate.

A New Creature
Dr. Gordon of Boston used to tell of an Irishman named Daley who had been converted in one of the Moody meetings. He had a companion named Murphy who was a wretched drunkard, and in whose salvation he became deeply interested. At the close of a prolonged debate, when Murphy was miserable and half-penitent, Daley got him to a meeting and he became a Christian. Daley knew the struggle that was before his comrade and set himself to try to shield him from temptation. The next Sunday morning Daley saw one of Murphy's bosom companions coming and he feared that if the two men should get together, it would be another spree. He met the man at the door and said, "Murphy is not here. He does not live here any longer."
With much anxiety Daley told what he had told to Dr. Gordon, and asked, "Did I lie, sir?
You know Mr. Moody said that when a man is converted, he is a new creature. Old things are passed away and all things have become new.
Now what I meant was that old Murphy did not live there. Old Murphy is passed away and new Murphy is a new man."—JAMES I. VANCE, D. D.

THE NEED OF RUSSIA
One of the great needs of Russia today is the Word of God. The Soviet government has granted permission for the printing of 50,000 Bibles and 50,000 New Testaments. The American Bible Society has already paid for the plates which have been prepared and are waiting. It will take $35,000 more to pay for the paper and the printing of the book.
An American committee is seeking to raise this money. This is a rare opportunity to place the Bible in needy Russia.
between the two the words determine the amount. If the words are uncertain or ambiguous then the figures control.

If an instrument by its terms is to bear interest but it is not stated when the interest is to begin or end, it is presumed to run from date until paid.

When an instrument is not dated, it is considered dated as of the time of its issuance.

In case of a conflict between the written and printed provisions the writing will prevail.

When the words 'If' or 'We' are used in the portion of the writing which promises to pay, the obligation is joint. Where the words 'We or either of us' are used, the obligation of the parties is joint and several. It is a matter of evidence in the event of a conflict as to whether the instrument expresses the parties' intent.

In order to blind endorsers the holder of an instrument must present same for payment when due, to the person or persons primarily liable for payment and if this is not done within a reasonable time the endorsers are discharged. If due diligence is exercised in this regard, default in payment by the maker gives the holder an immediate right of action against the endorsers, who are secondarily liable. Presentment for payment must be made upon the due date or within a reasonable time. They are made by the holder or his agent, the instrument must be exhibited and payment demanded. If the person primarily liable be dead, demand must be made of his personal representative. If only partial demand, demand may be made of his proper agent or written and left at or mailed to his place of business.

When an instrument is dishonored by the maker by his refusal or failure to pay upon demand, the endorsers may then be held responsible. Presentment and demand may be waived by the terms of an instrument and in such case no demand is necessary but the maker is supposed to pay when due, and if he defaults those secondarily liable may be held.

When an instrument is dishonored in the manner aforesaid, notice of dishonor must be given to all persons liable thereon, either primarily or secondarily, in order for a right of action to accrue against them. This notice must be given within a reasonable time after dishonor or those secondarily liable are released. They are deemed to have notice when some has properly addressed, stamped, and deposited in the post-office.

The words "protest waived" constitute a waiver of the right of protest, presentment, and notice of dishonor. Protest is a form of procedure by which the dishonor of an instrument is proven and is generally made before a notary or similar officer.

The material alteration of an instrument after delivery by the maker, furnishes grounds upon which he may avoid liability thereon. A material alteration is held to consist of a change of date, change of the sum to be paid, change of interest rate, or the addition of time or place of payment, change of names of parties, and similar changes which affect the tenor of the instrument.

A bill of exchange is an order drawn by a person upon another who holds funds of the drover, ordering him to pay to a specified person a given sum. Under this head are classified ordinary checks and drafts.

A check or draft must be presented for payment to the bank or person upon whom it is drawn, within a reasonable time or the drawer is discharged.

In order to the validity of an instrument the signing thereof must be intentional. If the person signing is not negligent and unintentionally, by reason of fraud or otherwise, signs an instrument within a reasonable time, it is not forbidden by law.

Usury is an exorbitant rate of interest specified in an instrument and which exceeds the legal rate of interest fixed by state law. It is uncollectible as to the part which is in excess of the legal rate. The legal rate of interest varies in different states and depends upon the enactments of legislatures.

Sunday contracts are in general void, and it is held in most jurisdictions that notes, etc., executed on Sunday are unenforceable.

Accommodation paper is that which is signed by a party who receives no consideration therefor, but signs for the purpose of lending his name and credit to another. Accommodation endorsers and makers are liable to the payee and holder in due course. The person accommodated, however, would have no recourse against an accommodation maker or endorser, and could not sue him for the purpose of making him jointly or in any way liable.

Every state has adopted Statutes of Limitation within the time within which actions on negotiable instruments must be commenced. If these entitled failed to sue within this period, their right of action is barred and cannot be maintained, provided the person liable avails himself of this defense. A Statute of Limitation is an effective plea against the liability of any party.

Statutes of Limitation as well as interpretations of the Negotiable Instruments Law vary in different states and the legislative enactments and judicial decisions should always be consulted where these are in question.

CHURCH ADVERTISING—THE WHY AND HOW!

By C. A. S.

Midweek Prayer Service

The Church as a whole has allowed itself to get into the "slough of despond" when it comes to the midweek prayer service and we ask ourselves repeatedly, "Can it be made interesting? Can it be made attractive in any possible way? Can the attendance be increased from the mere handful each week? How should we advertise it?"

People like to be connected with something that is successful. They do not like a failure and this is one of the reasons we have so much trouble with the public. So we treat failures as if they were successes. This is a failure, and not only a failure, but a dismal failure. Why? Well, that's for you to search your own heart and life and find the cause. If I were to tell you the actual truth as to why your prayermeeting is a failure, you probably would take a big jump and run up a "milf truce" and refuse to read the remainder of this article as well as the other articles of this series. But as to how it may be made a success is for me to venture a few suggestions. Now, I have been in prayermeetings and in prayer-meetings; some have been bad, some have been indifferent, some have been gloomy, but very few have I been in where my soul could gather warmth and grow and expand in grace and knowledge. One of the reasons for the condition of the prayermeeting is lack of preparation, of course, unwise choice in the leader and any one of a number of other things which I might mention, but it isn't my purpose in this article to malign the midweek prayer service, but rather to venture suggestions as to how the prayer service in the middle of the week can be re-established as a vital factor in the spiritual life of the church and community.

One night last winter, I stopped over in a small town in one of our northern states and found there was no prayer meeting as if it was. As it was prayermeeting night, I made inquiry of a man on the street where the nearest church was. He told me, but said him, "There is no service there tonight. All the churches in this town join in a union service for their prayermeeting and it is held for a month at a time in each of the churches, with a different church each week in charge of the program." He told me that he was on his way to the service and invited me to accompany him and I did. The service this particular night was held in the Methodist church, I naturally, thought it would be held in a small room, but instead we were ushered into the main auditorium of the church. It was a beautiful church and I found it comfortably filled— an audience of possibly four hundred people. I had no more than been seated when, to my surprise, the organ began playing and a vested choir of twenty-four voices began singing, 'Faith of Our Fathers.' The service this particular night was in charge of the Presbyterian church and they put on one of the most unusual and interesting prayer meetings it has been my privilege to ever attend. Announcement was made that the Baptists were to have the service the following week and as I left that church, there came to my mind the hundreds and hundreds of prayer meetings being held over this country, not one of them with possibly more than a corporal's guard in attendance.

What a wonderful idea. What a wonderful and splendid inspiration to think, that God's people can assemble together in the spirit of unity, friendship and love for one another and join in a great midweek prayer service, honoring and praising His name. Are we content to say this did the man, "This is for me and my wife, my son John and his wife, use four and no more," or are we determined that the church of the living God is for the people, the sinner and the saved alike?

It seems to me that the above related experience of a prayer meeting shows and proves that the midweek prayer service can be made interesting and attractive, and after all, it isn't the prayer meeting that makes the church, it isn't the activities that make the church, such as the Sunday school or church service, or midweek service, but it is the gospel of Jesus Christ that makes the church and it is the duty of the church to give the gospel as many will hear. If you want to have a strictly testimony and prayer meeting, plan a revival of the old-fashioned class meeting on Sunday morning, but for the sake of the Master and His Church, let us do something that will startle, that will awaken an unenlightened world to the glories and mysteries of His holy service, and give to the world a midweek service that will command their interest, attention, cooperation and support.

If the midweek or praise service is a service worth while, people will come, but if you have something good to offer the world, you must get it before their eyes. Hence, the need of advertising and utilizing every means at our disposal. I can hear some good brother say now, "Well, why don't you show us how to advertise?" My friend, the reason most of the advertising you do falls to draw a crowd is because it is copied of someone else you have used. Be original. Use your own initiative. Each pastor, each church, each community is different. That which may be used to good advantage in one place and brings results, oftentimes will fail in another place. Too many preachers depend upon someone else to put them across. All any person could hope to do in writing on advertising would be to give an idea, and then each individual man to shape around that idea his own plans.

The prayer meeting should be one of the great services of the church, but not until the men and women, the leaders of the church realize its importance and are willing to give to it the same serious consideration that they do to the other problems of the church, will it ever take its place again in the hearts and lives of the people.
