Each issue contains one complete book dealing with one particular subject—biography, Christian doctrine, church history, devotional, etc., etc. The contents will be of equal interest to ministers and laymen.

We have what we feel is a very attractive schedule for the first six months of 1931. The series will start with an abridgment of William Taylor by Dr. John Paul, president of Taylor University. Dr. H. Otton Wiley will contribute an abridgment of Sheridan Baker's Living Water, which will be a rare treat for those who appreciate something with a deeply devotional tone. Rev. D. Shelby Corlett has prepared a most excellent treatise on the Cross in Christian experience, which will be the Easter number. Dr. J. B. Chapman will give us an abridgment of Scriptural Sanctification by John R. Brooks, which was one of the holiness classics in the early Methodist church.

No person—minister or layman—who can possibly spare the dollar, can afford to miss these first six issues for 1931.

THE LETTER OF TRUTH IN THE SPIRIT OF ERROR

By The Editor

He was a "young" pastor of a new church in a large city. His denomination was not well known, but the real of the preacher made fair to help in making a place for him. A small company of people in a suburb found a convenient building and asked the young pastor to come for an afternoon appointment. He went there among strangers and preached a scathing, blistering sermon. The result was that no further invitations to preach were extended and the promising opportunity died almost at the same time it was born. But the young preacher learned no lesson.

He simply conceded himself by saying, "Well, I gave them the truth, when I did have the opportunity."

Now we have no doubt but the letter of that sermon was true, but we hold that the truth was given in the spirit of error. He preached love in the spirit of impatience, and the people felt and knew the spirit and acted upon the spirit instead of the letter.

And this reminds us that one may preach responsibility in the spirit of lightness. He may preach toleration in the midst of bigotry. He may preach grace in the spirit of hate. He may preach seriousness in the spirit of levity. He may preach liberality in the spirit of grasping. And he may preach deviation in the spirit of legalism. And the spirit counts more than the letter.

For there are instances in which the preacher may and should and does say things which of themselves are radical and stinging. But he says them in the spirit of love and sincerity and unselfishness, and men hear him.

But perhaps there is no better instance of preaching the letter of truth in the spirit of error than in those instances in which the preacher "discusses" the most sacred themes in a desultory and formal way, so that the most meaningful things in human life and hope have the same color as "idle tales." A great actor is said to have remarked to a preacher, "We tell imaginary things as though they were true; you tell real truths as though they were imaginary." And too often this is the impression made. But it is said that Abraham Lincoln went once with some friends to hear a preacher who had a very unusual theme. On the way home someone asked Lincoln if he believed what the preacher had said. Lincoln said he did not. But recalling the earnestness and sincerity of the preacher, Lincoln continued, "But he convinced me that he believes it."

THE PROPHET AMOS, THE PREACHER OF JUDGMENT

By Olive M. Winchester

The days to which the prophet refers, "It is from Zion that Jehovah will roar, and from Jerusalem that He will cry, till there mourn the mountains of the shepherds; and in shame Carmel's peak shall stand." (1:2, Duhm's translation.)

To understand a man, his message and his achievements, one must know his age. This is very true in the case of the prophet Amos. Living as he did in the days when outward form and expression constituted the fundamentals, in religion no matter how great the variance from practice and heart condition might be, he alone seemed to penetrate beneath the superficiality of this religious veneer, and see that God was not honored thus, that He was a God of righteousness and truth. Pioneering into the realm of such truths he became a forerunner of the still greater prophet, Isaiah.

POLITICAL CONDITIONS

Seeking for a knowledge of his times, from the political standpoint, there seemed to be an unsurpassed period of prosperity, which had not existed since the days of Solomon. During the reigns of Jehu and Jehoahaz Israel had been invaded by her hereditary enemy from the north, Syria. Hazael who had usurped the power proved to be a very aggressive king upon the throne in Damascus, and carried his invasion even down into the territory of Judah. Although Jehu was a king of no mean ability, yet he was obliged to see the entire country east of the Jordan given over into the hands of the Syrians.

Moreover in the reign of Jehoahaz conditions continued to become only the more aggravated. "The seventh year," says Gell, "saw Israel reduced by Hazael to lowest depression. Constant invasions of the Syrians drove the population from their homes (2 Kings 13:25; 10:32). Things had indeed sunk very low. The whole of Gilead and Bashan as far south as the Jabbok was in the hands of Syria and Hazael even forced Jehoahaz to reduce his army to no more than ten thousand infantry. The northern kingdom was, in fact, well-nigh destroyed. Its people were haughtily trodden underfoot like the dust by their oppressor (2 Kings 13:10)."

But in the reign of Jehoahaz there was a turn in the tide of affairs. Many reasons may lie at the basis of this. First, Hazael had died and a new king reigned in Damascus. Furthermore Syria was feeling the oppressive hand of Assyria. Moreover most important of all was the fact that in Israel there was a power behind the throne in the person of the prophet Elijah. In his general career Elijah did not enter into public activities like his great predecessor, Elisha, but occasionally we find him in this connection. Being asked by King Jehoahaz, Elijah, even though he was on his death bed, inspired hope and courage in the heart of the monarch, telling him that the arrows which he had hidden him should indicate victories over the Syrians. The only reason, however, was that the king did not empty his quiver for then he would have completely triumphed over Syria. Although the prospects against this enemy were good, yet there were other foes pressing hard upon them. The Moabites and the Ammonites on the east ravaged the country and even some inroads across Jordan. With some reviving of national affairs in the reign of Jehoahaz, the way was opened for greater successes under Jeroboam. As Gellke tells us, "Little is told of his character and his works, but the extent of his conquest and the glory to which he raised his country mark him as the greatest of all the kings who reigned in Samaria. It seemed as if the times of David had come back. The northern empire of Solomon was restored. From Hazarot on the Orontes to the way of the Arabah (2 Kings 14:25; Amos 6:14) south of the Dead Sea, from the city of Maacah to the sea of Ammon were reconquered and made tributary under native princes. The valley of the Willows on the border of Edom became, the southern boundary of Israel. Ammon had long harassed the territory of the eastern tribes, which was not in the hands of the Syrian and its ferocious cattle had roused the wildest indignation. But to use the words of Amos, 'fire was now kindled' in the wall of Rababah, and its palaces burned down; the king and the princes falling into the hands of the victors (Amos 1:13, 14). Mosb had in part recovered itself since the raising of the siege of Kir Haseketh and not only refused to pay tribute imposed by David, but was observed, sent bands of its troops yearly unto the Israelites territory, burning and slaying all before them. The reign of Jeroboam soon, however, tamed their boldness."

CIVIL CONDITIONS

With such conquests naturally the fortunes of the country brought considerable changes within its domain. Israel had been gradually advancing from an agricultural state to a mercantile. It became a wealthy commercial power. The booty of war and the profits of trade gave the country many resources, and aroused in its people great eagerness to be rich.

Accompanying these other developments was the growth of the towns and cities, and in them extensive building enterprises were carried on. Of such we obtain a picture in Amos, and especially his contemporaries all that he had the following prophet, Isaiah. Amos tells them: "You are building you houses of dressed stone, but you shall not live in them." (6:11.) "Summons the enemy to smite The great house into splinters." (The small house into bits? (6:11, Duhm.)

Hoeve warns, "Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and bulled palaces; and Judah hath multiplied fortified cities: but I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the castles thereof" (Hosea 8:14, R.V., Duhm). Isaiah promises, "The Lord sent a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel. And all the people shall know, even Ephraim and the inhabitant of Samaria, that he spake in truth and in righteousness of heart. The bricks are fallen, but we will build with hewn stone; the sycamores are cut down, but we will put cedars in their place" (Isa. 10:20-21, R. V.).

Moreover in their building there was every display of luxury that the time could afford. There were the winter houses and the summer houses, some "paneled with ivory." Then the furnishings were lavish. Accordingly we hear the prophet sounding forth a message of doom against such display of wealth which did not simply represent returns of trade and commerce, but rapine and oppression of the poor. With no uncertain sound he foretells: "Then will I strike the winter-house And the summer-house too, And away goes the "Away go the tapestries" (Amos 3:15, Duhm.)

In this same connection speaking of the calamity that shall befall the elite of the city, and when the narrow escape, he designates: "Those who are sitting there in Samaria. In the corner of the couch: On the cushion of the divan" (Amos 3:12b, Duhm).

Thus the simplicity and general feeling of mutual understanding and helpfulness have passed into the more superfluous and caste dividing tendencies of town and city life. As in modern times so then the city had come to full growth with all of its attendant evils.

SOCIAL CONDITIONS

In the changing conditions of the times the middle class was fast disappearing, and in the place was the rich with all the attendant luxuries and the poor oppressed and downtrodden. "Great estates took the place of small holdings." The wealthy feasted on the choicest in the land and engaged in revelry and carousals. They lay "unraveled and anointed onouches of ivory." says Gellke. "Their hauteurs were splendid. Rich music filled their halls as they feasted. Nor would the wine tempered with water—the drink of their fathers—content them. They drew it pure from the huge vessels in which their predecessors had mingled their modest refreshment." The prophet draws the picture for us: "They lie on ivory couches And lounge clomish on their divans: Aye, they devour the lamb from the fold, And the calves from the stables." (6:3.)

"They jingle on the harp, They invent song-satches, like David. They drink wine out of the big bowl, They smear themselves with the finest oils" (Duhm.)

"Lost in the spell of the wild life of intermepence and drunken revelry, they disregarded the poor. False measures and balances were in the hand of the merchant. "Making measures small, and prices high;"
LYME, with deceiving balances, So as to sell the simple folk for money, A poor man for his gold. (Amos 8:5, Duhn) The poor received no mercy. The rich even took delight in wounding the needy and helpless and filled their palaces with the fruit of their violence. Moreover public tribunals were only means of exaction. We listen to the account from Amos himself: "Because of three wrong deeds of Israel, Because of four, I'll not turn it away: Because they sell the small man for gold, The poor man for two shoes." (Amos 2:6a, Duhn)

"They beat the head of the low-ranked man, They make the miserable man's knees tremble." (Amos 2:6a, Duhn)

"They are heaping up violence And wrongdoing in their towers! And They do not know how to do honestly, is The utterance of Jehovah?" (Amos 2:10, Duhn)

"For thus saith the Lordly one Jehovah to the house of Israel, Who are turning justice into wormwood, Who are giving righteousness the second place, Who hate the mower in the court of justice, Who despise any man that speaks the truth: "Because you tread down the lower class, Taking a corn tax from them: "I know, many are your evil deeds, And manifold your sins, Ve exams of justice, money-stashers, Who push away the poor in the court of justice" (Amos 5:3, 7, 10, 13, Duhn)

With such conditions prevailing it is little wonder that the prophet called out to Ashdod and even "to those in the land of Egypt," even though they were heathen nations, to gather together and see what was transpiring on the mountain of Samaria: "So many bewildements are there, Oppression in its midst!" (Amos 5:9, Duhn)

The very people who had received in the law of Jehovah vast ingenuity in regard to the poor had now lost sight of all these and only their own pleasure and increase in riches.

Moral and Spiritual Conditions When we turn to the moral and spiritual conditions of the land we find, no brighter picture, yet what is more, it becomes still darker. Through the influence of Baalism there flourished gross immorality." Describing the condition, Geike relates: "Intercourse with the heathen communities round, the house of Baal's dissolution and the power of its worshipers and dispersed to their homes; the unscrupulous self-indulgence and malignence of the rich, prompting equally unworthy means to indulge it; and the widening gulf between upper and lower classes were ruin ing the country. Above all the old religiousness of Israel was well-nigh gone. The ox worship of Bethel at which the heathen worshipped and near which he had a palace bestrided a high priest with a numerous staff, richly endowed, not poor like the priests of Judaea. The whole country was filled with altars abused by superstition as time went on, even the darker idolatries of Phoenicia, which John, the founder of the dynasty put down, rose again everywhere. A temple of Asherah had remained from his day in Samaria and was now re-opened. The women once more burned incense before her, as their favorite goddess and decked themselves with their earrings and jewels on festival days. Silver and gold images of Baal were set up. The smoke of sacrifices to idols rose on the top of the mountains and incense was burned to them on the hills under the shades of sacred groves. The abominations of heathenism once more polluted the land. Maidens and matrons converted with temple harlots and played the wantons in the name of religion. Gilgal was given to idolatry; they sacrificed bullocks in Gilgal; they transgressed at Bethel and multiplied transgression at Gilgal."

With all of this corruption and idolatry, yet on the other hand there were certain expressions of religious zeal and what is more a strong feeling of religious optimism on the part of the people. Kirkpatrick gives us an account of these phases. "The outward ordinances of worship were zealously observed at the various sanctuaries. Sacrifices and burnt offerings and meal offerings and thank offerings and freewill offerings were brought in abundance. New moons and Sabbaths and festivals were observed. The joyous songs of the worshipers sounded in their sanctuaries (5:21B; 4:4; 8:5, 10). They trusted in the privilege of descent (5:2; 9:7). Was not Jehovah of hosts in their midst? Did they not duly propitiate Him in the manner He desired? Could he possibly desert them? Surely the day, whenever it might come, in which He would manifest His presence more immediately and visibly must be a welcome day of blessing for Israel, and discomfiture for Israel's enemies! (5:4, 18)."

In the midst of this wealth and luxury, this violence and robbery of the poor, this corrupt and self-complacent religion, the prophet Amos came. Across the carefree ease of the day, the vice and crime, the immoral worship and self-confident trust, he sent his message of the coming wrath of Jehovah. The day in which he lived was the brightest in the religious history of Israel. His was not the easiest task, but undaunted he performed it.

Practical Application
If we note the various phases of life in this period of Israelitic history, we see many lines of parallelism with our own. There is today the same eagerness for wealth, the same mercenary spirit. There are also like lusts arising respecting the poor, and also like corruptions often in the courts of justice. Religion, also while it may not be immediately polluted with the vices of immorality as then, has been so broken down in the church and home that its restraining power is no longer felt, and moral standards have been lowered until one is led to wonder whether all moral fiber and strength is to go in the wake. Furthermore there is self-complacency in religious form and expression without a real heart transformation.

With such conditions present, we might feel that all is without hope. One thing we can rest assured that as in days of old the wrath of God rests upon all that do these things, but it is another issue to assert that there can be no redemption of grace, no reviving power. Despite his fulminations of the coming wrath and judgment of God, the book of Amos closes with a note of hope. Moreover although the days of the northern kingdom were drawing to a close, yet the southern kingdom which had at times been filled with like evils experienced two outstanding revivals before it fell before the captor. Who can say when the cup of iniquity of any people is full?

Leaving the question of the possibility of the reawakening of our land and nation as a whole, . . . the providence of God to us, we can draw from the days of Amos this comfort that if we feel that our day is fraught with great difficulties, there have been others like unto it in the history of the world, and as the grace of God abounded to give the divine message in those days so will it in our day. Moreover as God endowed and inspired His prophet, so will He today. As Amos with boldness stood steadfastly against all the evils of the day, so are we not to compromise with sin. As Amos preached a religion that had moral and ethical content in it, so likewise are we called. As Amos recognized the presence and guiding hand of the great Jehovah, so may we.

TEMPTING MEN TO CHRIST
If the hardest thing in the world to resist is temptation, we should present a vision of Christ that may appear to those who are living for religion—dreams and sees visions that intoxicates every bit as much as the license permitted by the will not to believe; only it intoxicates with deeds of kindness, justice, chivalry, love. It answers the insatiable demands of youth and high spirit for freedom from boredom and the restlessness of daily routine, every whit as naturally and unendingly as do drink-drinking, petting parties, gaming tables, or the self-pollutions of lust and license which surely, if slowly, evoke the loathsome Hyde out of the knightly Jekyll which is in us, and, judged by end results, leaves its devotees in hell here, whatever may await us beyond this bound line of time and space. Paul's life was as full of thrills as Herod Agrippa's; Livingstone's and Lincoln's as Jay Gould's or King Charles the Second's. The idea of expecting a halo for so-called self-moralization is a bumble. No working man wants any such rubbish. Personally I loathe the idea; the man who goes around with any such chip on his shoulder is a misfit and should get out.

Christ means to me the best kind of a Friend, as well as Leader, who is giving me in this world ten times—or, in spiritual hundreds— as good times as I could enjoy in any other way. Christ's religion to me is primarily for this world, and the New Jerusalem is to come down from heaven on to this earth, and we are to be the Washingtons and Nelsons. We have to save that city, and we have to save all the fun, of really creating it. If Cresus and Midas, Bacchus and the satyrs have the fun of life here, then the philosophy of the East is right. Life is hell, and Nirvana and nothingness is heaven.

We know What It's Like

When Christ is right and life is a field of honor, and Sir Galahad and Nathan Hale and Edith Cavell got the real fun out of it, then to every red-

When miracles are everywhere
And every inch of common air
Throbs a tremendous prophecy,
Of greater marvels yet to be."

The Decalogue

In this day when there is so much, loose living, so much law violation, so much disrespect for law, it is well to call attention to the old De-calogue that is still in force and as imperative as ever. The Ten Commandments as found in Exodus 20:1-17, read in part as follows: Here is a suggestion for a number of timely sermons.

"Thou shall have no other gods before me.
Thou shall not make unto thee any graven image. . . . Thou shall not bow down thy-selves to them.

Thou shall not take the name of the Lord
thy God in vain.

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.
Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work;
but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work.
. . . . For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.
Honour thy father and thy mother.
Thou shall not kill.
Thou shall not commit adultery.

The above code is wonderful in its comprehensiveness and simplicity. It has not a command too many and not one too few. It is a perfect guide. Said the wise man, "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man" (Ecc. 12:13). Like its author, "The law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just,
and good.""

Where is Hell Located?

(Isa. 14:9)

Hell from beneath (Esa. 14:9).
Deeper than hell (Job. 18:16).
Let them go down quick into hell (Psa. 55:15).
Her guests are in the depths of hell (Prov. 9:18).
That he may depart from hell beneath (Prov. 15:24).
When I cast him down to hell (Ezek. 31:16).
Brought down to hell (Matt. 11:22).
Cast the angels down to hell (2 Pet. 2:4).
Where is hell located?
Suppose we knew!

The Warmth of Human Interest

Henry Ward Beecher, walking down a street, passed a newsboy shivering in the cold. Being moved with compassion toward him, the great preacher bought up his stock, and as he handed over the coin said, “Surely you are cold?” “I was,” replied the lad with a gulp, “til you passed, sir.” The warmth of human interest had prevailed over the bitter cold of a New York winter night.

Some Bird

When a church seeks a pastor
They often want
The strength of an eagle,
The grace of a swan,
The gentleness of a dove,
The friendliness of a sparrow,
And when they catch that bird
They expect him to live,
On the food of a canary.

Listen

[From Poem on “East Diftich”]

Mountain peaks are God’s cathedrals,
Streams His organs; birds His choirs;
And the thoughtful, awe-struck, listen
As hosts above to angels’ lyres.

The Chemical Value of Man

Some chemical expert who loves to go into physical details has computed the value of a human body when resolved into its separate constituent parts. The result is as follows:

The ingredients of a man’s physical structure, plus water, are:

1. Fat enough for seven bars of soap.
2. Iron enough for a medium-sized nail.
3. Sugar enough to fill a shaker.
4. Lime enough to whiten a chicken coop.
5. Phosphorus enough to make 2,000 match sticks.
6. Magnesium enough to make a dose of magnesia.
7. Potassium enough to explode a toy cannon.
8. Sulphur enough to rid one of a dose of gas.
9. This whole collection would be worth 98 cents even now when things are worth three times what they were formerly.

And yet this physical structure is the abode of the Holy Spirit. Says the great apostle Paul,

“Your bodies are temples of the Holy Spirit.”

“I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mer-DISOBEDIENCE

(Deut. 28:58, 59)

If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD;

Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and sore sicknesses, and of long continuance,

1. God's pleasure.
2. Human calamity.
3. Mental.
4. Physical.
5. Moral.
6. The loss of the individual.
7. What he loses.
8. Time.

2. But there are certain other conclusions which we have been compelled also to reach, viz.: 1. That the spirits of departed loved ones never come back to communicate with the living.

3. The "medium" puts you en rapport with the forces of darkness instead. On this point notice the following scripture: "The dead know not anything, neither have they any more a portion forever in anything done under the sun" (Ecc. 9:5, 6).

4. That the spirits which do respond are not the spirits of our loved ones.

5. a. They come from a dark place, and we all trust that our loved ones are in a place of light!

b. Let us examine the account of the witch of Endor bringing up Samuel: Her crying with a loud voice when Samuel appeared shows this to be something different from what her demon art had ever before effected. No doubt but that God permitted Samuel to come back to once more assure Saul that God had departed from him. He said to Saul, "Therefore dost thou ask of me, seeing the Lord is departed?" Samuel's return was for three purposes: (1) to rebuke Saul; (2) to tell him of the death of his son; (3) to prophesy Israel's defeat by the Philistines.

6. Today, however, the souls of the departed go to an entirely different place from what they did in Old Testament times. Samuel was in paradise (down) and "came up." Now the departed go immediately up to heaven, if they are Christians.

7. a. That all so-called haunted and ghostly occurrences are easily and naturally explained.

8. That all attempts to communicate opens a door for the entrance of evil forces which bring the mental and moral integrity of the inquirer.

Many a time we have seen souls so disturbed over this matter that they seemed almost in a state of mental insanity. Devilish hallucinations and superstitions filled them until they were more like the Gadarene demoniac than like followers of Christ. They were demon-disturbed.

Eskimo sorcerers who were converted testified that their art was not a mere imposture but that they were acted upon by a power which they could not control. But after their conversion they said that they had neither the will nor the power to do what they formerly could do. This shows that such power attends only devil-possession, and that it has no connection with the Spirit of God.

CONCLUSION: In conclusion let me say that all through the Bible the art of spiritualism is denounced in strongest terms. Never a word is said to the encouragement of "sorcerers," "witches," "familiar spirits," "necromancers," "mutterers," "soothsayers," etc. In the Old Testament times they were punished by death. And in the New Testament, "witchcraft" is classed among the works of the flesh (Gal. 5:20) and "sorcerers" are found in the tribe of those who "shall have their part in the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death" (Rev. 21:8).

GOD'S PARTNERS
By A. M. Hills
Text: "For ye are God's fellow-workers" (1 Cor. 3:9, R. V.)

We are in an age of co-operation. There are combinations of men and capital. This characterizes all great enterprises, and is the condition of eminent success.

In this we are but following and imitating the divine method. The great captains of industry might work alone. But how little, by working so, could they accomplish? Not Carnivale alone, but he and an army of helpers.

Not Henry Ford alone; but he and more than a hundred thousand helpers, show the world.

God might work alone. He often does. In Creation. In making the stars and constellations he had, and need, no assistants.

In providence. He moves the planets, winds and waves, multiplies the birds, beasts and fishes, and feeds every living thing without us.

In his moral legislation. He consulted no legislative assembly of mortal, and gathered about Him no advisory council.

But in the great work of saving men He has adopted the co-operative method. He makes men His fellow-workers. Law-givers, warriors, prophets and prophets prepared for Christ's coming. Disciples ministered to Him and preached His gospel. Apostles and Christians have continued His work.

I. NOTICE THAT IN THIS WONDERFUL PARTNERSHIP GOD IS THE SENIORS PARTNER AND FURNISHES THE CRUCIAL AND THE BUSINESS
The Gospel, the motives—The Holy Spirit.

The Call, the field of work and the wages.

II. NOTICE WHAT THE WORK INCLUDES
1. The spreading of the gospel throughout the world. We have business firms in America that send their wares to every clime. An abominable tobacco firm has a motto, "A cigarette in every mouth." They send damnum with a real worldly of a better cause. But God would have His partners go to every garret, cellar, city slum, lonely vale, mountain fastness, dark continent and lonely island of the sea with His gospel. The world will be His world.
2. The conversion of sinners. Christ died for each and made salvation possible, and wants them all saved. His command is, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."
4. The bringing on of all the moral reforms; the suppression of the drink evil; the tobacco curse, etc. The curing of gambling, divorce evil, social evil, popular prices, the vexing question of capital and labor, the ending of war, and the establishment of peace.

5. In the curing society of that insane greed that is destroying the nation's moral life. Everything that is needful to be done to make human society clean and Christian.

III. NOTICE THE SPIRIT IN WHICH OUR WORK SHOULD BE PERFORMED
1. Humility.
2. Love to God.
3. Love to men.
4. Holy zeal. Duff in old age, fainting when making a missionary address, and going back to finish his address.

Bishop Wm. Taylor, when superannuated saying, "I must go back to Africa to win 10,000 more souls." David Livingston, dying on his knees, praying for Africa.

1. What dignity and glory it confers to be partners with God. Dignity was conferred by associating in the work with Lincoln, Washington, Wesley, Luther, Paul. But how much more to be co-workers with Christ?

2. How great must that work be to which the infinite God summons all Christians to His help?

3. Think of the certainty of success. There will be no failure in God's enterprise! The work may seem hard and slow. The hosts of hell may rise up to oppose. But He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, and the uttermost parts of the earth shall be Christ's possession. No man's life can ever be a failure who loses himself in partnership with God.

APPROVING OURSELVES
By T. M. Anderson
In all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God . . . by the power of God (2 Cor. 6:4, 7).

Approving ourselves as ministers of God by the power of God. What a gracious privilege to be a minister of God and what a supply of power have we from God to enable us to be approved and worthy ministers. The desire for power is the dominant passion of mankind. It was the desire for power that the tempter appealed to in Eve, and in Jesus. The desire is not wrong, but it is often used wrongly. To want power for the purpose of glorifying God is legitimate and wholesome; but to crave power to be used in selfish pursuits is sinful. God has promised power to His ministers. If they will claim this promise and use this power to approve themselves ministers of God He shall give them an abundant supply in all things.

The power given to the ministry is in a sense twofold: there is given a consciousness of power; and a confidence of power. In the consciousness of power every holy man feels himself in possession of a power never known before. A sense of spiritual strength that enables him to live holiness and perform services never before known. He is amazed at the new force that moves him in life. He finds a stronger will than he has ever possessed before. His determinations are fixed in a given direction, and Satan is unable to bend them to the contrary. He has strength of affection which enables him to love the unlovable, and he has strength to suffer unjustly if he must. Such a man sees the power of the Spirit working out in his life in all its departments. He feels the surge of it as it fills his whole being with a happiness in the sight of God.

The second phase of power is in a confidence of power. Power is authority to do in the name of the Lord. A minister will do well not to "feel" his authority, and strut with pride in a vain show of authority. But a minister must be confident that God has vested him with authority to do business in His name. He is an ambassador for Christ. Behind him is the kingdom of God, for heaven's King has sent him forth on a mission to represent Him on earth. The minister must rest in confidence that he speaks with the authority of God. He will not feel the power of God in his words, for his sermon may be poor and feeble; but God will give it authority, and power to penetrate the hearts of men. The minister who is confident of this power will be encouraged to preach under the most discouraging circumstances. Like a prophet who, saw nothing but a valley filled with dry bones, but confident of God's power he proclaimed the message; and God made it true to the dead. Every minister will do well to meditate on these things, and in so doing call to mind the promises of God. It is so often the case with preachers that seeing no encouraging tokens they think their labors will be in vain. They have forgotten that the Holy Spirit is present, and will faithfully perform His work. God is not far away, nor is He reluctant to give grace to indifferent sinners and dead church members. Let us preach in a full confidence of power. Like a Samson, how ourselves with all our strength, and then God will make up the deficiency and the walls will tumble down. The worthies who have gained immortal fame before God wrought in a consciousness of power, and in a confidence of power. They put all they had into the task, and were strong in faith believing God would give all that was needed above that.

The Service of Love

Bishop William A. Quayle, in a devotional address at the Methodist General Conference in Denver, makes an address of rare spiritual beauty and power, with these illuminating sentences: "What is celestial service? Loving. A woman was sitting beside her sick husband. She was looking at him as he lay upon his bed, and he said in his feeble voice, 'What are you doing?' She said, 'Just loving you.' When God looks at us and says, 'What are you doing, folks?' please God, our answer shall be, 'Just loving you.' That is service." In these materialistic days, so full of bustle and hustle and push, let us never forget the priceless value of cultivating the habit of "just loving" our heavenly Father.—Dr. Aquilla Webb.

A Rain-or-Shine Christian

Rev. E. L. Snyder, of Columbus, Ohio, writes in a recent number of the "Expositor": "If you happen to live on the north side of Columbus, Ohio, out near the state university, you will have heard about the man with the big wheelbarrow, Jacob C. Schlegel, whom his friends call 'Red.' In working Mr. Schlegel gives one the impression of a human steam engine. On the coldest days of winter, on the warmest days of summer, people who live on the north side will often see a large pile of coal in a big wheelbarrow, and a steady man, beaming, friendly and black-checked. At seven in the morning his day begins, but no definite hour marks its end. Even as late as the hour of ten one may see a burning lantern on the side of the curb and hear the rumble of load after load of coal as it tumbles into the cellar of a satisfied customer. In fact, since 'Red' is the son of a blacksmith, the words of the people's poet, Longfellow, sound the right note:"

"Tolling—rejoicing—sorrowing,
Onward through life he goes;
Each morning sees some task begin,
Each evening sees it close;
Sometimes 'attempted, something done,
Has earned a night's repose.'"

"There are so many things that the feature writer might mention about this tolling, rejoicing man who earns his night's repose by wheeling coal, but we are interested now in rain-or-shine Christians. So let's repeat what he said to a friend over on Tenth Avenue on a rainy morning. 'My religion gives me the strength to keep going,' he said with a serious look on his face. 'I'm helping to keep folks warm, and God is good to me. I give Him out of thankfulness ten per cent of all I make. And the more I give to Him, the more He gives to me. In 1913 I wheeled 150 tons of coal. In 1920 I wheeled over $500 tons of coal. My earnings that year reached the thousand-dollar mark.'"

"Surely there's beauty in a life like that, and rainbow that shines through the coal dust and the rain. That being so, he is not a common coal man, but a merchantman who has found the pearl of great price.

Perhaps many people who have watched Red Schlegel at work do not know the story back of the man with the big wheelbarrow. But all of them have a love of his strength, his courage and his friendliness. Even the gay young students, co-eds and boy friends alike, stop long enough to say, as large heaps of coal bump on the basement floors of sorority and fraternity houses, 'Hello Red.'"

And what Mr. Snyder did not add is this, that Red Schlegel, who is known as Jake, is a shouting, shining, tolling member of the Church of the Nazarene in Columbus.

Evangelism

In a recent article Dr. F. W. Boreham names Spurgeon and Wesley as the two outstanding types of evangelists of modern times, and he discovers the secret of their success in these words:

"In relation to Mr. Spurgeon we cannot do better than quote ourselves under Dr. Fullerton's direction. Dr. Fullerton knew Mr. Spurgeon intimately, and the standard biography of the great preacher is from his pen. Dr. Fullerton devotes a good deal of his space to an inquiry as to the sources of Mr. Spurgeon's power and authority. It is an elusive and difficult question. It is admitted that there is scarcely one respect in which Mr. Spurgeon's powers were really transcendent. He had a fine voice; but others had finer ones. He was eloquent; but others were into eloquence. His success was due, not to his preaching of the gospel, but to the gospel that he preached. Obviously, however, this is beside the mark; for he himself would not have been so uncharismatic as to deny that others preached the same gospel and yet met with no corresponding success. The truth probably is that, although he attained to superexcellence at no point, he was really great at many. And behind this extraordinary combination of remarkable, though not transcendent, powers, was a deadly earnestness, a consuming passion, that made second-rate qualities sublime. The most revealing paragraph in the book occurs towards the end. It is a quotation from Mr. Spurgeon himself. 'Leaving home early in the morning,' he says, 'I went to the vestry and sat there all day long, seeing those who had been brought to Christ by the preaching of the Word. Their stories were so integrative to me that the hours fled by without my noticing how fast they were going. I may have seen some thirty or more persons during the day, one after the other, and I was so delighted with the tales of divine mercy they had to tell me, anes the wonder with which God had wrought in them, that I did not know anything about how the time passed. At seven o'clock we had our prayermeeting. I went in and prayed with the brethren. After that came the church meeting. A little before ten I felt faint, and I began to wonder at what hour I had taken my dinner, and I finally remembered that I had not tasted any! I never thought of it. I never even felt hungry, God had made me so glad!' Mr. Spurgeon lived that he might save men. He thought of nothing else. From his first sermon at Waterbeach to his last at Megiddo, the conversion of sinners was the dream of all his days. That master passion glorified the whole man, and threw a grandeur about the common details of every day. He would cheerfully have thrown away his soul to save the souls of others.

"Turn from Suraq to Wesley. John Wesley was the most triumphant evangelist that Europe has produced—and for two reasons. The first is that the evangel burned like a fire in his bones—an evangel because he could not help being an evangelist. Sir Arthur Quiller Coetz has described the scene when John Wesley returned to the old home to be present at the deathbed of his mother. His paternal sister, Hetty Wesley, opens the door to him. She does so with a kind of terror. She knows that, worn as he is with his journey, if she gives him the chance, he will grasp it and leave, even while his mother pants her last, to wrestle and win a soul—not because she, Hetty, is his sister; but simply because her is a soul to be saved. Yes, and she foresees that, sooner or later, he will win; that she will be swept into the flame of his conquest; yet her bruised spirit shrinks back from the flame. She craves only to be let alone; she fears new experience; she dreads even the joy of salvation. Life has been too hard for Hetty yet.

"There you have the man! 'To everyone,' as Dr. Fitchett says, 'to everyone—a man or woman, rich or poor, with whom he was for a moment in company—he would speak some word for his Master. The passing traveler on the road, the hobo who took his horse, the servant of the house, the chance guest at the table—each in turn, Wesley uttered some brief, solemn, unpreached word of counsel, and always with strange effect.' He absolutely could not help it; his heart was overflowing. On the very last page of the last volume of his journal, an attempt is made to account for his amazing life work. 'To one great purpose,' we are told, 'he dedicated all his powers of body and mind; for this he relinquished all honor and preferment. At all times and in all places, in season and out of season, by gentleness, by terror, by argument, by persuasion, by reason, by interest, by every motive and inducement, he strove, with unwearied assiduity, to turn men from the error of their ways and awaken them to virtue and religion. To the bed of sickness or the couch of prosperity; to the prison or the hospital; to the house of mourning or the house of feasting; wherever there was a friend to serve or a soul to save, he readily required. He thought no office too humiliating, no condescension too low, no undertaking too arduous, to reclaim the meanest of God's offspring. The souls of all men were equally precious in his sight and the value of an immortal creature beyond all question.'

"This was the first quality in Wesley's tremendously successful evangelism; and the second is more subtle. The ideal evangelist never flinches after crowds. He will get crowds—the magnetism of his message and the electric energy of his passion will secure that—and then, when he has got them, his trouble will begin. For a crowd is a nuisance, unless you know how to take it in pieces. A lawyer cannot deal with clients in crowds; a doctor cannot deal with patients in crowds; and, faced by a crowd, an evangelist is just as helpless. A crowd is like a nut: You break the nut to find the kernel; you crack the crowd to find the individual soul. A preacher who has to face a crowd must be a skillful psychologist as well as an earnest evangelist. A crowd has no conscience to be stirred, no heart to be broken and no soul to be saved. The man who stands before a crowd can only hope to succeed so far as he knows how to disentangle the individual from the mass. Like the stockman who, riding into a mob of cattle, swiftly and cleverly separates from them all the females, the male that requires, the preacher must know the secret of segregating the individual. Wesley and Whitefield, Spurgeon and Moody knew how to preach to crowds. They conquered the crowd by ignoring it. So far from forgetting the individual in the crowd, they forget the crowd in the individual. They liked to see a multitude of faces, just as an angler likes to feel that his line is surrounded by a multitude of fish; it enhances his chance of catching, in quick succession, first one fish and then another; but that is as far as it goes. To the great evangelist, the crowd was simply the multiplied opportunity of individual conquest."

PRACTICAL

PASTOR AND PRAYER

By Nelle V. Jones

THERE are many phases which could be discussed in connection with the prayer life of the pastor, but unless we can create a real desire for a deeper prayer life, all the discussion will be in vain. In order to create this desire we shall observe that we have a privilege in prayer in this dispensation which the old prophets' greatly desired but were unable to obtain.

In John 16:23-26 Jesus is telling His disciples that soon this great privilege is to be theirs. "I will ask the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever . . . he will give you it.

All that Jesus said is not recorded in the Word, but we find Him continuing this line of thought in Matt. 14:16, 17. Here He tries to create in their hearts a desire for this wonderful privilege by telling them about the prophets who desired this very thing, but could not have it.

He doubt told them of many old prophets of whom it is recorded that they earnestly desired to see the things which we see and hear the things which we hear. But "these all died in the faith not having obtained the promise." They had prayed, it is true, but always it had been through the slain lamb and the entering of the high priest within the veil.

Jesus on the cross says, "It is finished." Now the curtain is rent from top to bottom. Men and women, master and slave, Greek and Jew, all begin to enter. Now the prayers begin to ascend before the throne of God. Fallen man praying in the name of Jesus, coming boldly before the throne of God. Angels look on and marvel (1 Peter 1:12). When we therefore see that this blessed privilege which we have of praying in the name of Jesus has been desired by many others who could not receive it, we rejoice in the thought that we are the favored of God. Oh, glorious day in which we live!

Now every pastor is an ambassador of God.

He is sent to witness, and for this he is responsible. When he preaches the preaching which God commands, results follow, but the results are not his responsibility. His responsibility is to see that he receives the message correctly as God gives it to him.

The pastor stands between God and man and is not bringing a message of his own. He has no occasion to be ashamed or to apologize for the message, that is, of course, if he has the real message from God, and he can only be sure when he has stayed long in God's presence, for prayer is not only asking in Jesus' name, but it is also listening to what God has to say. Prayer is heartfelt supplication—it is communion with God.

Cable mounted up to Mt. Hebron for 12 years with God in communion with God. He received it only in its incomplete sense. What would he and others of the Old Testament saints have done with your opportunity and mine? What will we do with it? Weymouth's translation reads, "Powerful is the heart felt supplication of a righteous man."
written. "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (Heb. 4:12). But why is it that such effects do not always accompany it? Why is it that this sword with two edges, framed so that it may cut every way that the preacher may choose to turn it, does not pierce to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit? Is this sword wielded usually with an energy sufficient to do such execution upon souls? It requires a skilful hand to divide the joints at a single stroke, or by repeated strokes; and a decided aim to break or perforate the bones so as to reach the marrow. The hardest parts of a sinner are as powerless to resist this sharp sword as the softest; and it penetrates into the secret recesses of the heart, into the very citadel of sin, and slays it there with irresistible power.

This is the port of preaching we need. We shall never have a general revival over the kingdom till the preachers be brought universally to the use of this weapon. "Many," said a good man, "ought like fences, beaming only the air; but few fight in good earnest this fight of faith." It was not "after such a fashion" St. Paul wielded those spiritual weapons, which he joyfully declared were "mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds; casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought of the sinners to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. 10:4, 5). Unless such weapons are "levelled" with precision, and applied with determination, they will make but little impression upon the strongholds of Satan.

You say, "It is one thing to speak eloquently in favor of revivals, in the hearing of a religious party, around the tea-table, in the circle of the drawing-room, or even in the pulpit; but it is quite a different thing to come down into the "tug of war," the laborious, matter-of-fact work in a revival." Yes! and there are too many who, in this respect, imitate Leptus Major, a loose Roman, of whom it is recorded, that when his comrades were exercising in the camp, he used to lay himself down under a shady tree, yawning, saying, "Would that this were all the duty I were to do." Would that many of our ministers, well expressed, could bring about a revival of religion. I have read somewhere of a philosopher, in ancient times, who wrote powerful and eloquent articles upon the necessity of a "sacred education of war" upon the part of his countrymen; spirit-stirring and burning were his appeals. The spirit of the nation was aroused. "To arms! To arms!" was the general cry. The philosopher was made an officer. Instead of his morning gown, his study companion, be shone in "regimentals"; instead of the sword in place of the pens; a regiment of men to command, instead of a regiment of words: "Morn on the mountains, sunshine on the main, And battle's ready array upon the plain; Touch'd with the orient gleam, each line appears, A wall of fire beneath a hedge of spears!"

The hostile armies charge. The shouts of warriors mingle with the clangor of trumpets and the clash of arms. Our man of letters learned soon, to his dismay, that nice speculations, poetical descriptions, flourish of metaphors and highounding terms of national honor differed materially from the stern realities of war. There was a wide contrast between the quiet of his old study and the din of the bloody battlefield. A war of words, "black with ink," differed widely from the "one red scene of human butchery" which encompassed him around; so he prudently formed the resolution to "let them fight it out;"—an exit from the scene of conflict appeared the better part of valor. Whether he kept his sword, or flung it from him, is not material:

"He ran away, And lived to fight another day." (Continued in next issue).

ADVERTISING THE CHURCH

By Byron H. Maybury

ADVERTISING is the art of getting something before the public in such a way as to create a desire for it. In these days markets are created, and as advertising arouses desire, the public is educated to feel its need of the article, and as the field of advertising is enlarged to reach the greater number, the demand increases in about equal proportion.

A few decades ago nearly everything was done by hand. Much of the clothing and other necessaries were made at home, or else each man did for his neighbor that his neighbor could not do for himself in exchange for that his neighbor, could do for him. But today, since industry has gone from the home to the factory, since modern machinery and methods have, in advanced lands, revolutionized labor, since production is now done on a mass scale in the large centers of population, in order to keep the wheels of industry moving all the year round, markets have to be found. In order to do this two things are absolutely vital and essential: advertising and salesmanship. Men are sent out as representatives with samples to the trade, to secure orders from the great centers of distribution, the retail stores of the nation. But without advertising the best salesmanship in the world would fail in its mission.

Commercial art greets us everywhere today; so enterprising have the experts in this field become. One need not visit the art galleries for the latest in art, but has only to scan the latest copies of the current magazines to enjoy the best effort and talent of modern artists. Everywhere in every corner of the earth is the repetition of the ingenious and persistent efforts of modern prophets of the gospel of business as they proclaim their message to the world.

The Church of Christ needs to be just as alive to present day needs, to her place in the economy of things, and to those things that will aid her in her immense task for Christ and humanity as is the business world in its field. But there are so many in the Church who regard advertising somewhat as did the jurymen being selected to try a man for murder. They were afraid he would prejudice the jury against the defendant, and so would be unfair to the case, and this is the same spirit that we see in the Church today. We have the same spirit, and we have the same prejudice.

The Church of Christ needs to be just as alive to present day needs, to her place in the economy of things, and to those things that will aid her in her immense task for Christ and humanity as is the business world in its field. But there are so many in the Church who regard advertising somewhat as did the jurymen being selected to try a man for murder. They were afraid he would prejudice the jury against the defendant, and so would be unfair to the case, and this is the same spirit that we see in the Church today. We have the same spirit, and we have the same prejudice.

Of course I tell you how to write for the paper, would take a separate treatment, which we can't give at present. There are good books at your public library, however, which will enlighten you. Better yet, if you would strike up a sort of acquaintance with the fellows down at the newspaper office, instead of going in, as many do, with your little announcement, with a "Here's my announcement for the next Sab-b-a-a-th day, sit" (who likes to be high-batted)? Perhaps, by a little humble inquiring, and showing a willingness to learn, they would be pleased to give you some pointers as to their desires and general requirements, for local papers oftentimes have different ideas. I've known some who wanted you to tell them what is coming on, while others wanted you to tell them what happened last night. If a pastor would make it his business to show a little human interest in the fellows who handle the news, pass the time of day with comment on a late editorial, or some interesting current event, something, anything to get next to them, he would be surprised how many favors he will be able to secure, how much news of his church he can get in, all because he made the right contact. This holds true in larger cities, as well as small. If a man likes you he is more likely to stretch a point to please you. Some pastors may be able to contribute some prose or poetry occasionally that will not only be acceptable to most papers, always on the look-out for some human interest, local color for its readers, not only help him to secure a greater respect from the fellows in the office, but also get him, and incidentally, his church before that town in a worthwhile way.

Many pastors fall down in their newspaper work. I've had evangelists who have lamented to me how little some pastors seem to care about the newspaper publicity of the meeting. They appreciated all the write-ups I gave them, in keeping the meeting and the evangelist and singer, if I had one, before the reading public. Try it. A newspaper write-up reaches those who could be reached in no other way. The pastor who will make a study of this field will never regret the time and labor required.

Another thing about advertising. I have gone places, and upon inquiring, as I did at one place, where I might find the Church of the Nazarene at the Y. M. C. A. they said they had heard of such a place, had even seen it somewhere they thought, but beyond that were unable to elicit any further information from them. I might have gone to the police station, they might have known, but I didn't care to risk it. I am sure that our churches should be known at such places as the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A's, the hotels, policemen, railway agents, firemen, service stations, et al. A pastor ought to take more pride in himself and his work than to permit such conditions to continue long.

But the kind of advertising we think of greater importance than all we have mentioned - the advertising of appearances, or looks. This is a psychological matter, and its importance can't be denied. We are more or less judged by our appearance. We are not saying men are right in doing this, since what a man is within is more than what he may be without, but somehow, for some reason, men connect the two together, and I don't know but that they're partly right. In Jesus' day the Pharisees were careful to clean the outside, but neglected the inside of things. But in the holiness movement, which professes to be clean without and within, there is a great deal of uncleanness, at least as regards their places of worship. We clean the outside and see the inside, we have wondered what manner of people worshipped in some of the churches we have seen, or what kind of a pastor shepherded there?

We can say all we please about clean hearts, yet if we do not have a neat place of worship, befitting God's house, we belie what we profess. Since the world judges largely by appearance, business men realize the importance and necessity of presenting a place well-lighted, aired, spick and span, and inviting to the public. No "cheap John" appearance will be tolerated by worth while folks. No church which permits broken steps, cracked or dirty window panes, unkempt lawns, dirty lights, dusty pews, unclean floors, worn-out carpets, and dingy walls or ceilings within, can hope to make the right impression on a town. The looks of our churches tell us as strongly 'what we are as what we say we are. All the advertising in the world by printed page cannot hope to overcome such handicaps.

What is true of the appearance of the church is also true of the atmosphere that appears in our meetings. We profess to be different, to have the glory, yet when folks come in and find us dry and lifeless we belie our testimony.

Appearances are not everything, but they are something. People will judge us thereby, we must admit. I do not advocate expensive edifices, pretentious styles, or elaborate furnishings, beyond the ability of the congregation to care for comfortably, nor in, keeping with the simplicity of the gospel of Christ, as it was in the beginning. Many churches have drifted today. But I do say that God's house should be neat and clean and in good repair. David said to Nathan, "See now, I dwell in a house of cedar, but the ark of the Lord dwells in a house of tents." I know that God does not dwell in the temples of brick and stone, yet the house of God should be practical, plain and neat.

But though not always correct, it is sometimes harder to enforce. God help some of our churches, and may they not be what they appear to be. An old doctor had a young medical student whom he used to take with him on professional visits. One day he called on an old man, and, upon examining him briefly, said to him, "Sir, you have been eating too many oysters," and prescribed for him accordingly. Whereupon, when they were outside, the young medical asked the old doctor, "How did you ever know he had eaten too many oysters?" To which he replied, "Did you not see all those empty oyster cans under his bed?" Several days later, a call in came for a physician, and the old doctor, feeling indisposed, sent the young student. Upon his return, he asked him, "What was the matter with the patient?" "Oh, doctor, he had eaten a horse," he replied. "I saw a saddle and bridle under his bed." So we had better be careful of the looks of things around, or the people will be seeing things about us too. A druggist said that he knew what a man wanted when he came into his drug store by the way he looked. If a man came in with a grocious face, he always knew that man wanted to buy something, but if a man came in and approached him with a broad grin, he just knew the fellow either wanted to honk him for a donation, or else stuck him up with an unsalable line of goods.

Church people should remember that in every way we are advertising ourselves and what Christ has done for us to the world, hence it behooves us to be careful to avoid even the very appearance of evil.

But after all is said and done about advertising, as we have viewed it, there is an aspect of it which is really the capstone of the whole matter, and every method previously discussed or suggested is but a supplement of this most essential medium of advertising. We speak in reference to personal work. Great concerns advertise extensively by means of the printed or painted word. But they also have found that one of the most effective means is house-to-house advertising. Kellogg Corn Flakes Co. have great crews who go from place to place and leave leaflets and small boxes of samples at every house. Others do likewise, or else insert a coupon in a newspaper, or leave one at the door, which the housewife may find out, and take to the corner grocer, and secure a free sample.

It was just this method that enabled the early Church to do the great work they did in their day. Without the means of the press, or printed word, radio, telephone, etc., they advertised in the home, shop, market place, synagogue, before the magistrates, in the arena, and even at the burning stake. The slaves testified to their masters. Each one spread the good news, and as Uncle Budde says, "spread it thick." If they had had the modern means that we enjoy they could not have employed them for the simple reason that it was against the wishes of the authorities to hold public meetings, and they even forbade Peter and John to speak His name, saying to them, "Did we not strictly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and be hold've ye filled Jerusalem with your doctrine!" And they answered, "We must obey God rather than man, for we are his witnesses to these things," No, they could not announce a meeting as we can, and flood the town with advertising, for it would be broken up, yet they had success, oh, what success! We profess to have the same Spirit as they. What then do we lack?

With all of our advertising, we lack the personal contact which business is finding necessary to make today. So much so that a great portion of goods today is advertised and sold by house-to-house canvass. And what the church lacks today is just this personal contact. I notice that most of those who come to our altars during our special meetings are those who have been visiting, praying and working with for a while, and not strangers simply happening in. Sure, an occasional stranger is brought in by other means, but in the main, sometime, somewhere, a personal contact has been made. Right here in this city the lady we are staying with, not yet one of us, said that the first she ever heard of the Nazarenes was when a card was left on her porch. But that was not sufficient to bring her. While visiting her nieces in Pittsburgh, just 35 miles from here (Butler), she met a Nazarene lady who so impressed her with her prayer and testimony and life (which she did not know of it) that she was hungry to be like her, and have what she had—her heart just burned within her.

Jesus had a plan of advertising which modern business with all of its art has not been able to improve upon. He said of the Church that it was the light of the world, that a city set on a hill could not be hid, that a candle was not lighted to be hid under a bushel, but to shine and give light to men, and that we were to let our light so shine before men that when they saw our good works they would glorify our Father in heaven. As the star of Bethlehem advertised His birth, as the rainbow tells, of His promise to man, as the church steeple reminds men God is still on the throne, and the church chimes call men to worship, so we should be the stars, the rainbows of advertising, telling, reminding, pointing and calling men to God through Christ. This is the day we stand the best there is in us, and requires that if we do the job, we must all be at it, and always at it.

SURPRISES IN HEAVEN
By W. G. Schurman

I was reading after Mr. Moody recently and noted that he said there would, no doubt, be many surprises in heaven, that he would probably see many folks there whom he never expected to see, and would fail to see some whom he had every reason to believe would be there. That set me thinking and before me there arose the crucifixion on Mt. Calvary. In the 27th chapter of Matthew, it says, "They reviled him, wagging their heads, and saying, Thou that destroyest the temple and buildest it in three days, save thyself. ... Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, He trusted in God; let him deliver him now. The thieves also, who were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth." I got to thinking that as the people passed by on their way home at the noon hour they probably heard these two thieves cursing Jesus, and they may have said, "What an awful death to die—they are both lost and doomed forever," but perhaps about 2:30 in the afternoon one of the thieves was struck with the great solitude of Jesus, and seeing His attitude toward His mother when He charged John to care for her, he may have thought of his own mother. Here he was—a man, dying without a friend in the world; perhaps's disgruntled to his home, had broken his mother's heart and she had passed on before him. At any rate, something occurred to make him feel that he was a sinner, and with the awful burden of a past record on his life, he was enabled, in that dark hour, to see hope in the presence of a crucified Savior. I can hear the folks who had passed by at the noon hour saying, as we say now, "Well, I wonder where the two thieves are and what have they discovered? We passed by and they were cursing the Son of God. Of course, they are both lost forever." What a surprise when they shall stand before the King to see him who they thought was doomed and damned.

This leads me to say that the ministry, and indeed, every other person, should be careful in their comment on anybody. Wesley said; "Day making haste to do the deed; they are gone, the die is cast, their destiny settled, leave them with God." I am thinking now of a woman whose husband passed away, and the preacher, preaching in a neighboring town, referring to the funeral, made the unqualified statement that God had cut him off and that he was a lost soul. Of course there is always someone to carry a statement uttered by a preacher back to the party concerned and she in turn, I think, has not forgiven him to this day. Our hearts are very tender when our own loved ones are concerned, and my opinion is that a preacher ought to be very careful about consigning anyone to the pit. Anyone familiar with Adam Clarke's Commentary will perhaps be amazed and surprised to find that he expresses hope that not only Saul, but even Judas, may not have lost his soul. Indeed unless it specifically says so in the Bible, it would be wise for us to withhold our comments on doubtful cases, and among the people to whom we minister, I am sure is it never best to allude to them as Illustrations where there is danger of wounding some loving heart.

THE FATHER'S LOVE

Some years ago I was strongly impressed with the love of God, and had previously, freely, stated that God's thought in putting man out of the garden was punishment, and added to that. He cursed the ground so as to compel man to work. A careful reading of the 3rd chapter of Genesis, however, made this seem differently. In the 22nd verse of that chapter, the Lord God said, "Behold, the man is now become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever: therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden." What an awful thing it would have been for the human race if God had not sent them forth from the garden. Note the expression—it does not say that God thrust them out or put them out; but sent them forth. Suppose they had stayed; suppose they had done what the Lord feared they might do—put forth their hand and eat of the tree of life. Adam would be alive today, Cain would be alive today, and what an awful hardened wretch a person would be several thousand years of age. They say that solemn ever does a man over 70 years of age give himself to the Lord because of the hardened process of sin.

Just as criminals come forth from the jails and penitentiaries to instruct younger minds in crime. What an awful place this world would be if men hardened in crime thousands of years were still roaming the earth, for that would, evidently, have been the case had Adam stretched forth his hand and eaten of the tree of life and lived forever. What a kindness on the part of Jehovah to let man expire at a certain age. Is it hard to see the goodness and kindness of God for the coming race in His action in sending Adam forth from the garden?

I am sure that many of my readers have heard the expression; "They cured the ground to punish man for his sin, but the record says, 'Cursed is the ground for thy sake.'" Get it now, "for thy sake." Not cursed be the ground because of your sin, but for your good—"for thy sake." What does it mean? Evidently that man, as a sinner, could not be left idle, and this is a self-evident fact. I was born in a mining town. Whenever there was a strike where men roamed the streets in idleness, the editor went forth that all the saloons must be closed. Why? Because it was not safe for the populace to be on the streets with the men idle and the saloons wide open. Many a sin or questionable amusement would be intolerable if it were not that man has to work. With no sin in his heart he could have lived in the Garden of Eden, picked his bread from the trees and eaten of nature's bounty, but as a sinner, he must now toil on his head by the sweat of his brow. This was for man's sake.

I have heard men give illustrations that I am sure are not true to facts. The preacher who reads this article will recall the illustration of the mother who stood by the bedside of a dying father and husband, and brought reconciliation between him and an estranged son, and then heard the preacher make the application that Jesus Christ brought a headstrong sinner and an angry God together, but I do not believe that is true to Scriptures. I learn by the Scriptures that the atonement originated with God—John 3:16 says; "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," and Peter says as he rejoiced over his restoration, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." One of the sacred writers says that we receive peace from God our Father, and He is called "The Father of mercies," and He says "I will be a Father unto you.'

The Scriptures state that "Every good gift and every perfect gift comes down from the Father." Jesus is continually referring to His Father. He says "My Father," "I and the Father which sent me," and "as the Father hath taught me, I speak these things." We marvel at the gentle, tender spirit of Jesus but here He confessed that He received it all from the Father. He says, "I honour my Father. It is My Father that honoureth me." The people wanted Jesus to show them the Father, and He said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Jesus Christ was the express image of the Father. When Jesus Christ touched the blind eyes, it was the Father touching blind eyes; when Jesus Christ healed the lepers it was God the Father healing the lepers; when the dead were raised to life and the grim monster Death was compelled to relinquish his victim, it was the Father's power that did it." Jesus said I am "the vine, ye are the branches, but the Father is the husbandman." Here is a picture of the farmer, tilling, preparing the soil that the vine might grow.

Jesus again said, "The Comforter whom I will send unto you from the Father." In another place he said, "I still have much to say from the Father," and was called "The promise of the Father." John 16:24, 27, reads "At that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you, for the Father Himself loveth you. Incidentally, this is the promise on which I got sanctified that memorable night, the 17th of February, 1900. I decided to stay up all night and pray until I knew that I was accepted of the Father, and I was pleading the promises and saying "O Christ, implore the Father in my behalf," and something seemed to say to me, "To the scriptures, to the scriptures." I opened my Bible, and there was this verse, seemingly as big as the sign on the side of a house: "For the Father Himself loveth you," and I slipped into the rest of faith on the love of the Father. Oh! that we might see it; Oh! that we might preach it more. "God so loved the world." The great heart of God is broken; Jacob mourning over his lost Joseph is a type of the Father; David mourning over Absalom is a type of the Father, "God so loved;" "God so loved the world;" "God so loved the world that He gave." The very nature of love is to give. God's kind of love will make you and me want to give. When giving to the Father is a habit, it is because of a lack of God's kind of love in the heart. I am as sure of that as I am that I live. The poet says:

"For the love of God is greater than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal is most infinitely kind.
If our love were but more simple, we would take Him at His word
And our loves would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord."

THINK THIS OVER

FIRST church, Chicago, has recently been blessed with a five days' convention with Rev. J. G. Wilbur, pastor, every night. He said in one of his sermons that that prince of evangelists, J. Wilbur Chapman, had said that he could not find anywhere in the Scripture after the resurrection of Jesus Christ, where we were asked or encouraged to plead for forgiveness of our sins. The admonition was to confess our sins and if we confess our sins He was faithful and just to forgive. In other words, forgiveness had been all arranged at Calvary and that humanity's job was not now to ask forgiveness but to confess our sins. He then went on to say, "To whom shall we confess?—not to the preacher, for he has not learned always to keep those things in his breast. He is tempted and betrayed into telling someone else, and for the same reason confession ought not to be made to any member of the church, regardless of how pious they are; not to the church, as a whole; as I have seen some people foolishly doing during the last two or three Sundays. On a member's thought anyone will be convinced that this is the wrong course to pursue. Why should a man burden a church, of several hundred members with the sins that he has committed? They cannot help him; it does not help him to tell the church. The only reason for confession of sin is that forgiveness may be granted. To whom then shall we confess? To God for God alone can forgive sins."

This, I am sure, is worthy of consideration. Though I had never heard it before, I believe J. Wilbur Chapman is right.

Brother Martin then took up the question of chronic sinners at an altar, and caustically, brother, is not the altar overworked, in your humble opinion? Has not the evangelist, sometimes, told too much stress on a person's coming to a public altar? I am not saying he has, I am simply asking the question. I believe it will pay us to think about these things. Bro. Martin illustrated it in this way: He said if a man is traveling across the country in an automobile and gets a puncture in his tire, there are two ways to get it repaired. One is to run into the next town on a flat tire and go to the first garage. Well, we all thank God for the good way, but he says there is a better way. Drive up to the side of the road, jack up the car, remove tire and tube, put on a patch, inflate your tire, let down your jack, and drive into town and not a soul in the town will know that you even suffered a reprieve for a time. Then he made his application. "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous"—right at the side of the road; right in the office where you work; right in the home where you live, seek God for pardon immediately. Why wait until the following Sabbath and walk up the aisle and throw yourself prostrate at the mornings' beach, and have the world look on and say, "There he is down again."

Can't you see that automobile coming into town on a flat and everyone seeing only the flat tire? No matter how beautiful the car, their attention is attracted to the crippled wheel, whereas had he been able to drive up to the right place and right his puncture, he could have sailed through town at twenty-five miles an hour, and hear the people say, "What a beautiful automobile he has." I am sure the reader can get the application. I have prayed with people, and so have you, my brother pastor, and they have asked God to forgive them, and I am sure, and you are sure, that they were sincere, and we know if they were sincere, they heard them, but that would not have been the end. That night at the service they walk out, go down to the altar before several hundred people, and why? Let me go back to the automobile. Here is a man that is afraid to trust the work of a handy-kit at the side of the road, and though he patches the puncture, puts air in the tube, goes into town, but still persists in going to a garage, having that tire torn off and having the garage man look at the patch. In other words, he has repaired the puncture but still persists in going to the garage and paying out, money for nothing. So the man who goes to Christ immediately when he slips and falls and sins, and then goes to an altar is doing as unnecessary a thing as a man would in going to the garage after having repaired his puncture.

Another thing Brother Martin said is that God seems to like to pin down the blame of one's failure on another. Adam blamed Eve, Eve blamed the serpent, Saul blamed the people. David said, "I have sinned." It has always been a grave question in my mind why God seemed to punish Saul so severely and to forgive David so freely, and I am satisfied that a careful reader of the Scriptures will see that every time that David failed, he said, "Lord, I am the fellow; I have sinned." I have done wrong, but some of these other characters who seemed to receive such severe punishment were always trying to shift the blame on someone else.

EARNSHENESS

It was my privilege a few weeks ago, to attend a meeting of the Blue Ribbon Stores, who are fighting the chain stores in our city. I saw 1000 men, and women stand for one and one-half hours listening to a speaker denouncing the chain store system, and urging his hearers to stand together in their effort to counteract the influence of the chain system. The earnestness of the speaker held the best of us, and I confess I clung to Deere and Christ, and coveted his spirit of earnestness for the ministry. I then listened to a man give a Thanksgiving address; there was no earnestness; there was no passion; there was no pathos, but just a few glittering generalities, and some of the generalities did not even glitter. I am more satisfied than ever that earnestness is a commendable quality for a preacher. The hearers are quick to discern whether a man feels what he says or not. I know, personally, that if I have stayed up until 2:00 or 3:00 o'clock in the morning, praying and meditating, and if I examine my heart as to my earnestness and the seriousness of standing between the living and the dead, I can feel my message gripping the people as it does not at other times. I am constrained to say that earnestness is not only a commendable, but I think an essential qualification for the preacher.

PERSONALITY

I read with interest the editorials of two religious papers recently. One of these writers would say, "Rev. So-and-so, has said, or Prof. — has so declared," and there seemed to be very little of his own thought in the whole editorial. The other one, while I knew he was quoting in places what he had previously read, so mixed it with his own personality that we Carved it much more readily, and read it with interest. This makes me wonder if it is not better for a preacher to feed perhaps on what others say but digest it and give it out mixed with his own personality, than to use even finer language but seldom saying anything himself. Think this over.

"PREACHING TO THE DYING"

Some of our readers will remember hearing of that great man of faith, Dr. Cullis, of Boston. I had the privilege of preaching in the Cullis Conscriptive Home in that city years ago. One of our women went there to die, but God marvelously healed her, and when I was out to California this summer I had the joy of seeing this good woman sitting in the front seat at the campmeeting, still rejoicing in the Lord. She arranged for me to preach in that Home one evening when I was pastor at Lynn. I do not know if the building is still standing, but I will never forget the service. The inmates roomed upstairs and came down one flight to the dining room. There may be a psychology in that for we were told that the Home was weak. Then to go downstairs to sit at the dining table, they were moved over to another section of the building, and received their meals in their room until they passed away. You can readily see how they would fight to the very last in an effort to get downstairs and sit at the table. A peculiar
If you ask me for it, you can have it." He said "Don't be foolish; we are talking serious." I said, "I mean it, brother. If you ask me for this SC piece, I will give it to you." He smiled and turned away, and I turned to another fellow sitting on a bench, and said, "If anyone will ask me for this SC piece, I will give it to him." For such an unheard-of proceeding that no one made a move for possibly a minute. Then one fellow said, "Well, if you are a preacher and trying to help us, you certainly would not lie for 50c, so here goes," and he reached out and took it out of my upturned hand, whereupon the man to whom I had been speaking and trying to teach the lesson of faith, said, "My! I didn't think you meant it." Then I made my application, and said "Don't you see, I can lie, but the Scripture says 'God cannot lie'" and he got upon his knees and I really believe he found the Lord. His faith touched the promise.

Again let me repeat

If our faith were but more simple
We would take Him at His word.
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord.

A LESSON ON FAITH

I remember before I entered the regular ministry of going to the Poor Farm in Nashun, N. H., every Sunday morning and preaching to the drunkards who were piled in there over Saturday night and Sunday. I am sure that many a man went to his home Monday morning with new determination and new courage, for they were always released on Monday. I received an excellent lesson on faith at that institution one morning. I was trying to make a poor fellow see that God loved him. He felt he was no good and had been nothing but a nuisance and a curse to his family, and a disgrace to his parents. I had tried to show him how God loved him, and that if he were really sorry for his sins, and willing to confess them to the Lord God would forgive him. I remembered his asking, "How can I receive this grace of which you speak?" and I immediately came to my mind the promise, "He that asketh receiveth," and I said, "You need carfare to go home tomorrow morning, don't you?" He said "No, I can walk," but I said "If you were to ride, you would need some money," and he said, "Yes, I haven't got a penny." I said, "All right, here is half a dollar.

If the psycho-analysts. He points out that the newer psychology believes in "unconscious urges," having their roots in the unconscious mind, which are the same as the theologians term original sin.

In dealing with sin, Barbour outlines the method that is the basis of forgiveness and sanctification. He, then, brings out the method of psychology in dealing with abnormal cases of sickness, due to mental disturbances. First, there must be affection on the part of the patient for the analyst. This is termed fixation. This is the case when one is not under the subjection to will. Next comes making conscious the unconscious," which means that the psychologist searches in the unconscious mind for causes of the mental disturbances. The patient "confesses" all possible sources of trouble. This is the same as confession in seeking God as one's Saviour. After the cure of confession has produced the desired results, the psychologist has the patient "subliminate" the energy which once was bound up with the unconscious through this process, which Barbour affirms is the same as sanctification from a theological standpoint. In the newer psychology, sublimation means that the energy which is bound up with complexes, ideals, etc., which cause one trouble, must be diverted to some more worthy end. It is at this point that Barbour's argument is the weakest.

While one cannot accept all that he says, still the work is one which every preacher should read, in that it points out the trends in psychology. Sin at the hand of such psychologists is receiving far better and more orthodox treatment than is the case of the group of modern preachers and writers. Barbour's argument is also weak, as Dr. Skinner, professor of Psychology at the New York University, commented to me recently, in that he accepts only one or two types of what may be termed "newer psychology." For a long time preachers have been a little leary of the psychologists who called themselves psycho-analysts, in that most of their arguments deal with dreams and sex life and energy. But there are other branches which have cast this off, and that offer much material for our common profit. It is well to remember that psychology is a study of the mental life, and the outward behavior as influenced by the mental life. Since we as ministers must deal with the same material—the mental life and its influence upon behavior—it will do us well to give more attention to the study of psychology.

PSYCHOLOGY FOR RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL WORKERS, by Skinner and West (Century Press), is another book on the subject of psychology which every preacher can well afford to read. The book is large, over 500 pages, and covers a large mass of material which is related to our work as ministers. Some 200 pages of the work are devoted to an introductory study of the field of psychology and one is not under the subjection to will. Next comes making conscious the unconscious," which means that the psychologist searches in the unconscious mind for causes of the mental disturbances. The patient "confesses" all possible sources of trouble. This is the same as confession in seeking God as one's Saviour. After the cure of confession has produced the desired results, the psychologist has the patient "subliminate" the energy which once was bound up with the unconscious through this process, which Barbour affirms is the same as sanctification from a theological standpoint. In the newer psychology, sublimation means that the energy which is bound up with complexes, ideals, etc., which cause one trouble, must be diverted to some more worthy end. It is at this point that Barbour's argument is the weakest.

While one cannot accept all that he says, still the work is one which every preacher should read, in that it points out the trends in psychology. Sin at the hand of such psychologists is receiving far better and more orthodox treatment than is the case of the group of modern preachers and writers. Barbour's argument is also weak, as Dr. Skinner, professor of Psychology at the New York University, commented to me recently, in that he accepts only one or two types of what may be termed "newer psychology." For a long time preachers have been a little leary of the psychologists who called themselves psycho-analysts, in that most of their arguments deal with dreams and sex life and energy. But there are other branches which have cast this off, and that offer much material for our common profit. It is well to remember that psychology is a study of the mental life, and the outward behavior as influenced by the mental life. Since we as ministers must deal with the same material—the mental life and its influence upon behavior—it will do us well to give more attention to the study of psychology.

are off color from our standpoint. The authors say, that from the standpoint of psychology at birth the child is non-moral, which of course is the currently accepted theory of religious education, and again in a line or so they affirm that not all individuals need to be converted, in that some may grow up under religious instruction and thus be gradually brought to a knowledge of God. The interesting point is that the authors devote a section to the psychology of sanctification, pointing out its need, the processes by which the experience is attained, and the value of the same. We go all the way with them, except that they state that the experience may be attained by various means, and we think it comes only as a second delirious experience. The amazing thing is that here one finds an outstanding work on psychology, written by two professors at the New York University, published by one of the largest publishers in the land, which is pro-orthodox as this is. With less than a page of material inserted, which would qualify these off-color statements, this book would make the best that could be found for our minister's course of study. It covers the field of general psychology, with sufficient thoroughness, and then it relates the field of psychology to the problems of the minister.

Much material is coming out at the present time on psychology for ministers, which we can well afford to read. But much of this needs to be related to the problems of the ministry more closely than has been done so far.

PsYCHOLOGY FOR THE WRITER, by H. K. Nixon (Harper), is an interesting book which the preacher can afford to read. Nixon, who teaches literature at Columbia University here in the city, has gathered the material of psychology as it relates itself to the problems of the writer and has given it to us in this book. Some of the problems discussed are such as these: Tricks of psychologists, what makes men act, psychological factors in character development, the role of sex, how to produce literary effects, psychology and the creative imagination, etc. While this is written more especially for the writer, still the discussions on the tricks of our trade, psychological twists in character development, the production of literary effects, throw light on the people with whom we deal every day in our ministerial life. A life which has been warped psychologically, with unbalanced emotions, a flabby will, catering to every power of suggestion and a slave of imitation, in our ministerial practices needs every power, both mental and spiritual, brought to bear upon it, to disentangle it from these kinks, and curves, and gnarls.

Influencing Human Behavior, by H. A. Overstreet (Norton), is another contribution to psychology which is of interest to the preacher. The book is the result of a series of lectures given here in New York City, which have been published in the freer spoken style and not in the standard manner. Hence it is easy reading. It is full of interesting suggestions. For instance, he treats the problem of controlling the attention in this manner: What we can get others to attend to control their behavior. To control the conduct of others there must be: movement in our actions or arguments, suspense — "keeping the people guessing," the outcome — the same elements from us as speakers must go out that we would keep in the audience, a challenging technique, and a shocking technique. His chapter on "Crossing the Interest Dead-line" by every preacher, briefly says, start with concrete situations; start with something which makes a difference; begin with an effect needing a cause; or with a cause implying an effect; present a conflict; or use the shock technique. Here is excellent material for ministers to use in working out the introduction to their sermons. After all the interest dead-line is somewhere during the first five minutes that the preacher is on his feet. To fall here is to fall entirely.

The chapter on Fabrication Habits is very interesting. Another name for the same line of thought would be "Technique of Escape from Reality." Day-dreaming is an example of what is meant by this. One starts a career, or an activity, and is unable to carry it through to a successful conclusion. What does he do? He escapes reality, and escapes through some habits of day-dreams or such like. First he may become a romantic hero—someone of great importance due to a romantic ideal. Or he may fabricate a set of superlatives, make himself feel that his group and his thoughts and his methods are the superior. Or his way of escape may be through the "sour grape" method—everything's wrong, everybody's hopeless, etc. Or the opposite may be true, the Pollyanna type. These are just modes of escape from reality. The deacon through escape techniques may develop an ego superiority in church work. Sometimes escape from reality comes through the suffering hero technique. Everybody hurts him; the world is against him; he is the hero all right—but born to a lot of suffering and misunderstanding. This chapter alone is worth the price of the book.

For some three years now I have been gathering material for three books on psychology for the preacher and the church school worker. I have finished one—Psychology for Workers with Adolescents. Herein I have tried to present the field of adolescent psychology and apply the findings of this science to the problems which the worker with young people meets. The next one is to be Psychology for the Preacher. Here I am considering the general field of the work of the ministry, preaching, visiting, publicity, writing. Some of the chapter headings are: The Minister as a Psychologist; Social Psychology and the Minister; Psychotherapy and the Problems of the Ministry; New Psychology, Complexes, Sublimation; The Psychology of Suggestion for Ministers; How to Control the Emotions; Techniques of Escape from Reality; Keeping Mentally Fit; the Psychology of Writing and the Preacher; the Psychology of Public Speaking. The last one is to be Psychology for Church School Workers. On this I have not done much work, except the general reading.
one moment afford to lower the highest possible standard of training for our preachers in the great task of saving immortal souls. Have we yet heard of any who feared to take Miley or Ralphson in Theology, or Hurst in Church History, or Angell in Psychology? These texts are written up to the highest standard. So it must always be.

Again, if we look upon our church school workers as being just twenty years behind the other groups, our texts and materials for them will be twenty years lower. This likewise will spell suicide! When we for one moment write down to our workers, we are falling to bring them up to a higher standard. Our training texts, or lesson materials, cannot afford to be less than the best. For remember, what we get into our church school teachers we will reap in our students in the school! If we are satisfied with a shabby training, with adulterated doses of materials in our texts and helps, then similar results will be found in the work of our church schools. Our texts cannot afford to be one iota less in standard of material included, in type of writing, in scholarship, than those of the other denominations. We must match course for course Methodists, Baptists, Christians, Congregationalists.

Again I repeat it, it is an insult to the intelligence of our hundreds of trained ministers (for our schools during twenty years have poured out streams of trained preachers into our ranks), or our hundreds of high school and college trained faithful Y. P. S. and church school workers, to even imply through our training courses and other materials that we are not on the par with other denominations.

"Miley's Theology is Out of Print." And a good thing that it is! When we as Nazarenes have in our course of study texts which are true to our fundamental positions then it will be far better for us. Miley, while a classic system of Wesleyan theology, does not fit our current needs, nor state our fundamental doctrine of entire sanctification as we teach and believe it. Every time a minister studies Miley on sanctification he is liable to be led astray. Of course if a careful and accurate statement of this doctrine is not vital to the work of our ministry, then Miley is all right. It is high time that we write our own texts for our courses of study. Dr. Elseyon is certainly to be commended for his noble attempt to write himself the teacher training course for our church workers. This is a step in the true direction. Such must be done for every text in our courses of study where they do not absolutely state our doctrines. There was a time when it was necessary to adapt texts from other denominations for our courses of study because our Publishing House was unable to carry the heavy expense of bringing out such works, or because we did not have men sufficiently well trained to write them. But not so any more.

FACTS AND FIGURES
By E. J. Fleming

The following figures were recently released by the Federal Census of Religious Bodies: Out of every 100 persons over 13 years of age in the United States, 35 are church members. Five women are members to every four men. 52 per cent are in rural churches and 48 per cent are in the city churches. 212 denominations are listed, more than half of which have less than 7,000 adult members. Three out of every ten are Roman Catholics with 13,300,000. The Methodist Episcopal church comes second with 3,700,000. The Southern Baptist third, with 3,330,000. The Negro Baptist have 2,000,000. The Jews, 2,500,000. In proportion to population, church members are most numerous in the East and South while it decreases as we move Westward. The Protestants are in the majority in every State except Utah. Church membership is increasing almost exactly with the population. The number of Sabbath school scholars is 21,000,000, as compared to 24,740,000 in the public schools. The parochial schools are growing rapidly, but the Roman Catholic Sabbath schools are declining. Three out of every eight ministers in the thirteen leading white denominations and three out of every four of the three leading Negro bodies are not graduates of either college or seminary. Church property is valued at $3,840,000,000, but many churches did not report. Parochial schools are valued at $150,000,000. The Roman Catholic and Jewish school property is valued at $7,000,000,000.

The Boston American commenting on the financial situation states that last month American industries paid out $475,000,000 in dividends. A year ago last month they paid out $339,000,000. A net gain of $136,000,000 over last year.

The Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce estimates that the annual remittance of Chinese in America to China is $22,500,000. It is also estimated that more than 48,000 overseas Chinese have returned to China during the last six months.

Japan, without Korea, Formosa, Saghalien or mandated islands in the equatorial Pacific, now has a population of 64,447,000. It has grown about eight and one-half millions in population since the last census ten years ago. Japan has now 20,000,000 more inhabitants than when she defeated Russia twenty-five years ago.—The Christian Herald.

According to Labor Secretary Doak, 1,000 undesirable persons were being sent out of this country every month. Immigration authorities are closely examining the records of several of the country's most notorious gangsters in an effort to see if they can be deported.

A distinguished Frenchman, Claude Blanchard, recently visited our land and has been giving his countrymen the benefit of his impressions since he returned to France. The Negro and his final place in our American civilization specially challenged his interest. He said, "There are now 13,000,000 Negroes in the United States and when one recalls that these all are descendants of some tens of thousands of slaves imported to the southern plantations in the eighteenth century one asks which position they will occupy a hundred years hence." He looks upon the problem confronting us in an almost hopeless spirit and concludes, "That nothing can be done." If the white population gives to the colored population the best it has to give, "Everything can be done." America must get ready for the day when there will be 100,000,000 Negroes in this land. And how shall she get ready? The answer is in JESUS: or it is nowhere in the world. The Negro problem alone justifies the claim of home missions to a place in the front rank of life's supreme enterprises.—The United Presbyterian.

Jail sentences aggregating more than 14,000 years were meted out to bootleggers last year.

SERMONS FROM MATTHEW'S GOSPEL

A volume of thirty sermons by this masterful preacher of holiness. Fifteen of these sermons are from texts found in the Sermon on the Mount. These, we know, are the subjects that touch us where we live. It is a priceless blessing that the words of this prince of holiness preachers, on these practical topics, have been preserved and are within the reach of all.

There are in this volume four wonderful sermons on the coming of Jesus as the Christ of Bethlehem. Then there is a great sermon on "Peace under," from Matthew 3:12 which is followed by "The Fiery Baptism" from Matthew 3:11. "The Master-Passion of the Soul," "Journey Points," and "Faith Versus Superstition," are among the subjects presented. Full-page picture of Dr. Broshe.

THE PASTOR'S GREATEST TRIAL
By the Editor

We were discussing the situation of a brother minister who is having considerable trial in his endeavor to stay with his pastorate and bring it out to a victorious conclusion, and one of our company said, "The trouble with John is that he has always been in the evangelistic work, and has been accustomed only to seeing the people get saved and reclaimed and sanctified. But now he must stay on after the special meeting closes and see the people struggle against the odds of life and see many of them give up and backslide or drift into a meaningless profession and become spiritually worthless to the church. This is what kills the pastor and what tempts him to turn to some other form of ministerial service. And it is what makes it difficult for an evangelist to become a successful pastor. The evangelist has been accustomed to making the mourner's bench his 'cure all.' But in the pastorate it is necessary to employ patience, and to stand by and encourage a soul to fight his way through to a stable Christian experience and life. It would not be so bad if the people always won. But they do not always win. The preacher knows they could win and that they should win. And then to see them drift into a place of spiritual deadness, or into unadvised fanaticism, or into hypocrisy or into outbroken sin—that is what kills the pastor.

"And then down through the course of years the very human side of things is a source of test and trial. The pastor is likely to see his friends become lukewarm or even turn into opposers, when he is aware that it was his fidelity to God and his own duty that caused them to do so. And he is aware that for him to leave would do the persons in question no spiritual good. The pastor is tempted to run away, but he is also certain that he does not have a holy cause for doing so. He must therefore stay on and keep sweet and patient and loving and tender. He must take his trials to the Lord and come out of his closet smiling. He must forego all resentment and must not even mention the fact that the more he loves the less he himself is loved.

"It is often a trial to the pastor to see even his own people become infatuated with some 'passing meteor' in the ministerial sky, when his own spiritual discernment enables him to see that the preacher in question is like so many of the contemporaries of Paul, 'seeking his own,' and not the things that are Christ's. But the pastor must press on, absolutely refusing to be discouraged or to take too active a part in making way with the cause of his sorrow.

"Despite the fact that a mole hunter is always of bad reputation, the pastor has to spend much of his time removing small evils before they become large enough.
to damn. And picking notes out of eyes is a delicate task—Iest the eye shall also be destroyed.

There are compensations, of course, but we are speaking now of the pastor's greatest trial, and we think we have found it in connection with the necessity for his staying with the hard proposition when it would be so much more pleasant to spend his time in "getting something started." It is doubtless much more exciting and pleasant to help launch new ships than it is to keep those which are afloat in good repair or to salvage those which have wrecked upon the reefs.

But the pastor who is too little concerned to be deeply pained by the struggles and failures of his people is too little concerned to be of help to them. Christianity is not stoicism. And it is a rule in life that love must suffer. The shepherd braces the darkness and the storm to rescue his sheep, and then he does not stop to consider the merely commercial aspect of the matter, but carefully binds up the wounds of the rescued one and in patience and tenderness nurses it back to health.

It would be easy to be the pastor of an ideal church. But there are no ideal churches, just as there are no ideal pastors. And if there is an ideal church it does not need a pastor. Nay, our calling requires that we labor under many handicaps and "through much tribulation enter the kingdom of God." It may be good in fine weather to have a light-hearted, shallow man for pastor; but in times when the days grow dark or when the day is long in coming, the people are glad for a man who in tenderness and firmness has stood for his convictions and who knows how to point the sorrowing one to "The Man of Sorrows." The winning pastor is a suffering pastor.

EDITORIAL NOTES

There is a new book, "Science and the New Civilization," written by Professor Robert A. Millikan and published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, which I think will be interesting to many preachers. Of course there are many things in the book which sound strange and unreal to those who read only religious books, and there are some things which are highly speculative and of no particular value. But his chapter on "Three Great Elements in Human Progress" contains some noteworthy things. Professor Millikan believes that there is no valid quarrel between science and religion. Especially the preachers who are "a little older" and those who have a little hint toward the scientific viewpoint will find this new book interesting.

And while speaking of books, every preacher should at least send for Dr. John Paul's "Life of William Taylor." An abridged edition has been published as the February number of the Nazarene Monthly by our Publishing House. If you are a subscriber for the series of course you have already received this number, but if you are not a subscriber, send twenty-five cents to the Nazarene Publishing House for this booklet. William Taylor was one of the most apostolic men the Christian Church has ever produced and the story of his life cannot fail to quicken a preacher's faith.

Christ was at once a revelation and a revolution. He came to turn the world upside down, and was the chief iconoclast of historical history. Himself was the sower who went forth to sow. Jesus came and went. Now, as we look back, His passage across our sky seems swift as the flight of a long-ago. Yet years ago His ministry. We were but getting ready to entertain Him when He left us and the heavens received Him from our sight. Jesus came and went; but the world to which He came and the world from which He departed were not the same, for He had seeded our earth down to new ideas.

On coming, Jesus found nothing to His hand. Though He waited so long, so long, yet nothing seemed ready for Him to come. He had waited through the weary centuries, expectant, eager, saying as He looked earth's way, "Is it not ready yet? Is it not ready yet?" and at the last, He said He would not be here after His departure.

And Christ must master intellect. Christ must satisfy the reason. He must do more: He must satisfy the profoundest thought of the profoundest thinker. He must set thought on fire. He must make every barrier back to the horizon. He must put fire in the reason's blood. In other words, Christ must not dwarf intellect, but enlarge it. Standing beside Christ the tallest reason of the sons of men must feel he is a pigmy and that the Christ lifts an incommensurate might above him. It is to history to declare that since history began no such intellectual quickener has set foot on earth as Jesus. Christ. He has created a literature, a theology, a sociology. Men have loved Him, feared Him, hated Him, antagonized Him, but have thought about Him. Christ is reason. Lord. He has the dominion of pure reason. This man's name is Newton. He is an athlete. He is the greatest wrestler that ever bent wrestler's toil—no common athlete, no Samson with Gaza's gale on his shoulders; this is an intellectual athlete. Once we saw heads of sweat gather their dews upon his forehead and watch the passion of him; when lo? he comes, victor; and he had wrestled nature down and from her clenched hands had taken the secret of the primary colors. Rent, wrestler, rest! Once more we saw him bend his powers to toil. His former feats are trifles now. He wrestles with the invisible. Might and love are met. Forty-five centuries of men have been wrestled down, when at the end, our athlete is not mastered, but master, and brings away as trophy of his triumph, gravitation. Rest, victor, rest. Now, can Christ answer to this vast intellect's needs? Let himself answer. Christ was at his right hand. In life Christ was his strength and stay; and in his consummate years he essayed to write a comment on God's Book; and in his dying hour his falling sight beheld the Christ and his eyes were lighted. Biography attests Christ to be "the power of God" to intellect. And too, this is significant. Christ does this without apparent effort. The wonder of the ocean tides is not that they fill all creeks and inlets, and wash all shores clean, and lift, all boats lying like wrecks along waterless channels; and cover shoals and wrench upon the rocks, but the wonder is how easily 'tis done. No effort; but the tide rises and the shores are full! Charles Lamb was right. A company debating what they would do if the great Shakespeare came, the verdict was unanimous: they would all rise. The further question was raised, what they would do if the great Jesus should come, Charles Lamb stuttered, "We would all know!" Wisely answered, Eli. All wise reason kneels at the feet of Christ.

And Christ as God's power must master imagination. Man is poet and prophet. He has whittled his dreams into visionary words. Yet what can Christ do for man, the dreamer? If he abates imagination's flame and dulls it to ashes, he can be no adequate Christ. Well, time was when we must theorize concerning things like these: Happily, that time is past. Christ has been here so long we know His might. His biography is written in the love and fear of men. We have, seen Him enter imagination's dwelling; and immediately the room has been lighted up as if the sun had suddenly risen. What is told of Caedmon is true of all. A servant became a poet because he had a vision of Christ. His case may serve as an allegory. Christ makes poets of us all. He colors our skies with rainbow units. And in history Christ has created painting. He has shaped an exquisite poetic architecture. He has created music, He has given to earth Edward Spenser, and Dante, and Milton and Browning. More, He has with gracious demurement made all that love Him to 'see visions and dream dreams.'

Further, God's power must answer to the subduing of the will. He must not break this royal faculty as one would break a sword across his knee. Man's life must not be reduced to fragments, but restored to entirety. Christ came, "not to destroy, but to fulfill." Two opposing labors must be wrought by Christ in the will. First, the stubborn will must be made pliable. Some men are as ragged as the edge of a hacked sword. They lacerate all they meet. Their gentleness is cruel. They delight in hammering themselves flat; their wives, with less rhetoric and more truth, declare them stubborn. Man takes a ground and holds it because he has taken it. Even Pilate would answer, "What I have written I have written." Some men are so imperious as not to be bearable. But Christ is power. He can make brusquean gracious. He can bend obduracy, but he does it by getting within the will and filling it full of himself. He does it as you have seen steel rails bent. Cold, they resisted your strength, but heated to red heat they bent to meet the requisition of the desired curve. Christ makes will pliable but strong, and so brings Whiteroom's power. But this other thing, God's power must do in will. He must strengthen the emasculated will. He must become a cure for vacillation. Some men drift like leaves when wind-purged. Some men, when they are sober enough to want anything, can't name what they want. Who can Christ do for man, the dreamer? If he abases imagination's flame and dulls it to ashes, he can be no adequate Christ. Well, time was when we must theorize concerning things like these:

Happily, that time is past. Christ has been here so long we know His might. His biography is written in the love and fear of men. We have, seen Him enter imagination's dwelling; and immediately the room has been lighted up as if the sun had suddenly risen. What is told of Caedmon is true of all. A servant became a poet because he had a vision of Christ. His case may serve as an allegory. Christ makes poets of us all. He colors our skies with rainbow units. And in history Christ has created painting. He has shaped an exquisite poetic architecture. He has created music, He has given to earth Edward Spenser, and Dante, and Milton and Browning. More, He has with gracious demurement made all that love Him to 'see visions and dream dreams.'

Further, God's power must answer to the subduing of the will. He must not break this study window one day an old man shambled.
I had seen him often before. I had been at his home, and was greeted by him with winter's frigidity. I had seen him when his little grand baby lay dead; and yet a tear watered his eyes. He was hard. Adamant seemed not so hard to me. For fifteen years he had not been in a house of prayer.
Oh, he was hard. Cruelty was written on his face. Barren alike was it of pity and intelligence; and seeing him shambled past I ran to the door and into the street and asked him to come in. He came. We talked of "the power of God," I told him there was a cure for sin.
He had been wicked. He was dismissed from city service for the contemptible crime of stealing goods at a fire. He sat and listened to me listlessly, as if he thought, but I reconverted,
"There is a cure. Christ is able."
And we prayed, kneeling in the study. First, I, in poor fashion, told his case to God. Then he prayed. So listless was he, so lacking in apparent interest and tenderness, that when we rose, he saying he accepted Christ, I followed him to the door, then to the street, fearing he had misconceived me, and had not found 'the power of God.'
Not he. Kindled in his eyes or smarted on his face. But that night, entering the pulpit, on the front seat I saw him. He looked at me. His face was melted like a winter thawed to spring. His eyes were wet with tears. His lips twitched with feeling just put up these long years; and I shall see that man in heaven. So tender he became, a woman could not be tenderer; and beyond peradventure Christ is God's power to bring love to her regency again.
2. Christ is God's power to master sin. Sin is what saps the world. This world is fair enough to live in forever if sin could be banished. Sin is the nightmare which makes life terrible. Sin it is that makes history a tragedy. Sin is not a quietest, but restless as Napoleon and planning of an expanded empire. And sin has might. What truthful heart does not know this? Sin is here. It thrusts us sorely. It menaces our every step. Paul was accurate when he framed this phrase: "Where sin abounded, that grace did abound more;" that is the course of grace, the more common. A Salvation Army group was singing on a street corner in St. Joseph, Missouri. The music, musicians would have considered discord, but God's angels listened and thought it sweet. The music or the word which helps the gospel to a hearing is sweet. The song of God the angel is sweet; and, the music done, a man began to speak.
He was huge of head and form and might have sat for a picture of Hercules. You would not have wished to meet him in the dark, or when his wrath waxed hot, and as he began to speak tears were in his voice, and soon tears began to gather in the eyes of many. His story was this:
"A time ago I was a drunkard, huge in body as you see, and gifted with strength. I was a walking-danger. No two policemen but would give me wide room. I was a brute. My children ran and hid like scared birds when I came home. My wife was pale and dressed in rags. Scant bread was on our table. My house was a hovel and no home. One night, half drunk or more, I came along this street and heard those instruments going. I stopped. A man rose and began talking—something about salvation.'
He told how God could make a drunkard a man. I listened in a poor way with my added brain, but said at my heart, 'That's what I need,' and the man closed saying, 'All you who want to hear more about salvation come down to the barracks.' And I went; sat in a back seat, heard about Christ, sought him and found him. Neighbors, I knew then what sal-va-tion was. Friends, came down and got a home now, and a tidily dressed wife; and my children do not run from their father any more, but run to meet him and kiss him, and my wife has color in her cheeks and laughter in her eyes, and my daughter has an organ now and plays gospel hymns, and all you come up to my house and see what salvation did for us,' Brothers, Christ is the power of God to save from sin.
3. Christ is the power of God to slay death. When Prince Gautama, in "The Light of Asia," would have comforted a bereft woman, he sent her to find a heath where death had not sat down. She found death had always been before her. Poor consolation this, yet here is a truth. Longfellow was right:
"There is no flock, however watched or tended, But one dead lamb is there;
There is no fireside, howso'er defended, But has one vacant chair."
Each draped chair empty beside me says, 'Death has been here.' And who of you has not a chamber of mourning in your heart? At home is a little trunk, locked; you carry the key. It is a sacred place. What have you hidden there? Rubies and gold? No, nothing worth while to look at.
A shoe, a baby's shoe out at the toes, and little garments scarcely worn at all, and a child's phantoms, most of them broken, and a lock of hair. And you sit beside and drop your tears on these fragments. Yes, death has come and you cry:
"But, O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still."
Death is so near. He walks in at your door with never a knock. He knows no courtesy. He takes somebody of yours by the hand and goes out with him and your heart is broken. Oh, if only somebody will kill death! "Christ is the power of God" to slay death. He came to Jairus' palace saying, "Death, begone, for I have come." He came to Nain, and standing weary at the gate, was yet not so weary that he could not dispossess death of the widow's son. He came and cried, Lazarus is mine. And His face, God's power said, "The soul is sealed. The soldiers keep watch. The Marys are weeping, and John and Peter hold each other's hands in mute anguish, saying no word, but only shedding bitter tears. And Saturday is ended and Sabbath is past, and the morning begins to dawn, when 'every early' the grave trembles, and the guard fall like men dead, and with vast composure, such as befits him who is God's Son, Christ walks out of the grave and leaves death dead at his own door.
Surely Christ is 'the power of God' to slay death.
Your dear old father, with his furrowed face, and snow-white hair, and while tangle of beard, and hands scarred with labor and with battle, how dear he was, how passing dear! And one night an angel beckoned and with a smile as sweet as heaven upon his face he went; and you said, 'He is dead,' and bow him to the grave with uttermost anguish. When left what time the preacher said, 'Earth to earth, and ashes to ashes, and dust to dust, 'there stood beside the grave an uninvited guest. He stood strong and benignant. To look at him brought reést; and he beckoned and said, 'He is not dead, but sleepeth,' and took the father from the grave and said to his bosom, saying, 'I am the resurrection and the life.' 'Lo, I am the Christ, the dynamite of God.' Amen.
few buts. Thus he had been brought up on the very edge of the wilderness. His occupation was a humble one, probably caring for sheep that were not his own, for he says that he was "among the herdsmen of Tekoa," not that he was a herdsman of Tekoa. The special kind of sheep which seemed to have been indicated were thin, ugly and stunted, but were noted for their wool.

Again in his defense before the priest, Amaziah, he gives us another fact regarding himself; he was a dresser of the sycamore. Generally the villagers on the desert regions raised a few fruit trees around their wells. Here in Tekoa the special kind was the sycamore. The fruit of this tree had certain peculiarities. It grew in clusters on spires extending from the stem, and before it could become palatable at all it must be punctured to allow an insect resident in it to escape and the bitter juice. After this the fruit ripens, but even so it is not especially desirable. It was the food of the poor. We are not told that this was used by Amos; he was the gardener or the dresser, but in any case the indication is that the occupation was a humble one. Thus viewed from either phase of his life we can only conclude that Amos was brought up like any other Judean peasant among the poorest of the land.

His Familiarity With Nature

Despite the fact that Amos did not share the training in the regular prophetic schools, yet he was not, as we have mentioned, without a special preparation for his work. It might be said of him as Longfellow did of Agassiz, the great naturalist:

"And nature, the old nurse, took
The child upon her knee,
Saying, Here is a story book
Thy Father hath written for thee!"

"Come wander with me," she said,
"Into regions yet untrod;
And read what is still unread
In the manuscripts of God."

He had shared in the study of that book which lies open for us all, and so often neglected. He had seen the beauties lying hidden in the humble life about him. He had learned lessons from the wild beast and from the heavens above. As says Farrar, "No other prophet furnishes us with these metaphors from scenes of nature in such fresh, vivid, and rich variety. It is as if we read of the iron sloughs of the threshers (3:3); of stormy hurricanes (1:4); of the cedars and aspicks with their deep roots (2:9); of the hungry lion roaring in the forest (3:4); of the snared bird (3:5); of the shepherds tearing out of the mouth of the lion two legs and the piece of an ear (3:12); of hooks and fishes' netting (4:2); of the rain within three months of the harvest (4:7); of mildew, and yellow blight (4:9); of hills and wind and sunrise (4:13); of Pleiades and Orion (5:8); of mourning husbandsmen (5:6); of dangers from bears and serpents (5:16); of locusts, and the king's mowing and the after growth (7:1); of baskets of summer fruit (8:1); of earthquakes, and eclipses; and corn sifted in a sieve, and refuse wheat, and mended boughs, and the sower, and the gleaner, and the reaper, and the treader of the vintage (8:1; 9:9, 14)." He was a master of the metaphor and analogy. Because of this his thought lives before us in graphic and realistic pungency.

An Understanding of National Affairs

But Amos' life was not passed altogether in the desert. It is inferred with considerable degree of probability that he visited from time to time the markets of the day to carry on the trade in wool. During these visits he became familiar with the conditions in the northern kingdom. While there he did not simply snatch his attention in the one objective of his visit but was observant of the life of the community. "To these sights Amos brought from the desert a penetrating vision, a quickened conscience, and keen powers of discernment," say Etschen. "He saw the raw facts—the poverty, the cruel negligence of the rich, the injustice of the rulers, the immorality of the priests. The meaning of these he envisioned with a much persistency as he questioned every suspicious sound or sight upon the pastures of Tekoa. He had no illusions; he knew a mirage when he saw one. Neither the military pride of the people, fostered by recent successes over Syria, nor the dogmas of their religion, which asserted Jehova's swift triumph over the heathen, could prevent him from knowing that the immorality of Israel meant Israel's political downfall!" Thus it was that Amos not only studied nature, but he also delved deep into the book of human nature. He knew that the violation of certain fundamental laws would bring retribution, no matter how prosperous the present might be. He knew that God would judge man for his evil doing and that Israel had no claim as of right against Delyah, that their life must measure to certain moral standards to be acceptable to God. Like many others of his fellow prophets which were to follow him, he stood head and shoulders above the multitude in his moral and religious conceptions.

Knowledge of International Affairs

Not only did Amos have a penetrating understanding of the conditions among the Israelites whom he visited from time to time, but he knew of the movement of other nations and that too of bygone days. He makes mention of the Ethiopians no doubt with a knowledge that they had once migrated from one land to another as God in his providence had led Israel. Moreover he distinctly states that the Philistines had been brought from Caphtor, an event which probably had taken place before the children of Israel left Egypt. Then again he reverts to the fact that the Syrians had come from Kir or Armenia. He knew the history of the nations around about him.

Furthermore he saw gathering momentum in the distance the great world power of Assyria. The three visions preceding the personal history in chapter seven have been regarded as descriptive of the gradual subjugation of the land under the hand of the Assyrians. The first referring to the threat made by Pul which Amos stayed through a tribe from Menahem, the second to the coming of Tiglath-Pileser who carried captive the tribes on the north and the east and finally the devastating of the whole country under Shalmaneser and its captivity. Whether this be so or not the underlying thought is without doubt the danger lying latent in this mighty nation which would break forth and carry the people away as bondmen to another land.

Moreover Amos knew well how nearby nations had vaunted their cruel atrocities upon Israel. He recalls how the Syrians had swept down upon the east of Jordan with threshing instruments tearing its inhabitants like threshed grain. He also remembers how the Philistines sought to carry the whole people away captive and give them over to Edom, and how the inhabitants of Tyre, forgetting the covenant that had been made in days of old with Solomon had been a partner in this attempt to make the people captive. Then passes in review in his mind the ever continuing warfare waged by Edom which was closer of kin to Israel than the others and for that reason should have restrained their ire, but on the contrary they cast off all compassion and mercy, never allowing the gentler races to have play, and gave vent to their wrath "as some wild raving animal without control." Likewise the aspects of Ammon and Moab are called to mind.

With such knowledge at his command, we cannot but feel that the interests of Amos were extensive in their scope, that his vision of oncoming events was grounded in basic facts and understanding and that he gleaned eagerly all that pertained to the nations within the range of his world. These trends characterize a student of no mean ability and comprehension.

His Rhetoric

In studying the style of the prophet, Amos, there are several standpoints from which it may be approached. First, we may note the general culture expressed therein. As for general knowledge about the Bible has been thoroughly acquainted with every form of national culture and poetic expression which existed in his own day," says Farrar. "The splendor and intensity of rhetoric in which it is surpassed by Isaiah alone must have come in part from the natural gift with which God had endowed him for the high purpose of this life, but it must have been enhanced by sedulous cultivation. The poor herdsman and tree-dresser writes with all the power and finish of a born poet and a born orator." Then again we may consider the structure. On this point Driver comments, "The style of Amos possesses high literary merit. His language . . . is pure, its syntax idiomatic, his sense of purpose of this life, intelligence and clear. The even flow of his language contrasts remarkably with the short, abrupt clauses which his contemporary Hosea loved. Amos' literary power is shown in the regularity of structure which often characterizes his periods, as 1:3—2:6 (a cleverly constructed and impressive introduction of the prophet's theme); evidently intended to lead up to Israel), 4:6-11 (the frequent refrain), and in the visions; in the fine climax (3:1-8); in the balanced clauses, the well-chosen images, the effective contrasts in such passages as 1:2;
I. The Call

Reaffirming his call Amos tells us: little. The first fact that is made clear is that necessity is laid upon him, "Jehovah hath spoken; who can question it?" (Amos 3:8b). He is obeying the call of Jehovah to utter the words that have been given unto him. There is an underlying cause why the word of prophecy should go forth at this time. Just as a lion does not roar in the forest until he has the prey within his grasp, and a bird is not caught by a snare unless a trap has been set, moreover as a trumpet is not blown in a city without spreading alarm, so Jehovah would not be sending forth His voice through the prophet unless there was occasion, yea, an occasion for alarm. Then in his defense before Amaziah who had hidden him return to Judah and there eat bread and prophecy, implying that Amos was following the calling for mercenary reward, Amos related how he had a means of support humble as it was, but the command of God came to him. He had not assumed the prophetic office through any hereditary right or by virtue of professional training, but an injunction was laid upon him by Jehovah as he was tending the flock and he was hidden to bring this message to Israel. Accordingly in the call vouchsafed to Amos we see two essentials, the "impelling necessity that rests upon everyone who is divinely appointed to proclaim the Word of God and the consciousness that the source of the call is from God."

II. Practical Application

Looking back over the training and call that characterized the prophet, Amos, we might conclude that the call of God to any soul does not precede training. There may be a line drawn between formal and informal education, that is, the education received in and through the schools and education acquired otherwise. When opportunity does not present itself to receive training through the regular avenues, then the individual is not thereby exempt. He needs to seek other openings. How much Amos may have sought to prepare himself for the work of God after he was conscious of his call, we cannot tell, but it would seem from the development of his style that he made conscious effort to present his message in the best possible manner, and thereby he may have developed other lines also.

Furthermore, from the scope of the knowledge and understanding that Amos had we would infer that it is devolvent upon us to be well informed on issues of our day, their underlying principles, that we should look back into the history of the past, that we should have some philosophy of the great world movements and their significance, and the progressive developments of God and whither the hand of judgment is pointing. The God whom we serve rules the universe, and He would not have us just in some small portion of it alone without seeing His working among the nations.

Moreover, we can draw lessons for method of presentation of the message from this humble prophet. Not carelessly, not slovenly are we to let our thought and expression in words, but with due foresight and preparation, with study of method of approach, of figure and illustration, of appeal and of climax. The greatest message in the world demands the best of expression.

Finally, we see two great fundamentals in any call to service. If the necessity does not so press itself upon us till there is the cry within the heart, "Woe is me, if I preach not the gospel," then we might well examine our hearts whether or no the call be actual or whether we are sharing our conscience to its demands. Moreover, no one is to go to warfare at his own charges in this great battle against sin and evil. The conflict will be so great that only the consciousness that he has been divinely commissioned will be sufficient.
GOD SEeks A MAN

2. Show.

An ENDURING PERSUASION

Text—For I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day (2 Tim. 1:12).

This letter to Timothy is the last of Paul’s epistles. It was written with the knowledge that he was soon to be executed. The text is a statement of his confidence in God. Note:

I. He Knew Christ.

“I know [him], R. V.) whom I have believed.”
He had met Him on the way to Damascus. Personal relationship with Christ had brought better knowledge of Him.

II. He Had Tested Christ.

“I know whom I have believed”—whom I have trusted.
Paul had tested Christ these years. This testing had produced confidence.
He was like the woman who had marked “T” and “P” after many of the promises of the Bible. When asked what these letters meant, she replied, “Tested and Proved—I have tested and proved them.”

III. His Future PERSUASION.

“I am persuaded he is able to keep.”
He was glad to rest in the future in the hands of one who had proven sufficient for the past (2 Cor. 11:23-27).

IV. His COMMITMENT.

“That which I have committed to I deposited with him against that day.”
The deposit was himself—his life, his all.

“Thad day”—the day of execution for Paul—the day of judgment.

SERMON SEED

By T. M. Anderson

Subject: God’s Perfect Way.

Text: As for God, his way is perfect (Ps. 18:30).

There is a weakness in men to blame God for their misfortunes, even as Adam said, “The woman thou gavest me.” Job’s wife sought to fasten the blame on God for the misery of Job.

Many persons would question God, why this? or why that? But God’s way is perfect. He cannot do evil, nor tempt us to do evil. He seeks our happiness always.

Let us see some of God’s perfect ways in this form.

1. With the merciful thou shouldest shew thyself merciful (v. 25).

God is perfect in mercy, pity and compassion toward them who show the same. With what measure we measure to others He measures to us. If we ever need His mercy, then let us ever show mercy to others. If we make mistakes, and fall at times, up to him we must ask His mercy; let us be merciful to others.

2. With an upright man thou shouldest shew thyself upright (v. 25).

God is honest, fair, just and considerate in all His ways. He never shows respect of persons, nor is He partial in His dealings. Always is He just. Now can we not receive this perfect uprightness of Him by being upright like Him?

3. With the pure thou shouldest shew thyself pure (v. 26).

The holiness of God is revealed more and more to the holy. His pure love is seen by the pure in heart. Those who would see God revealed in His holiness must be careful to be holy. A holy God will manifest His holiness in times of trial, and persecution to all who are pure.

Where Culture Fails

Said Bishop J. W. Bashford, in a sermon preached before the students of Ohio Wesleyan University, “Human culture is a tree lifting its head toward the stars, but at last falling back in impotence to the earth. Human culture is a mountain lifting its brow high upon the highest heavens, but never touching the world above it and all ways remaining rooted in the earth. Human culture is the eagle soaring toward the sun, but with falling wings and drooping spirit returning to earth again. Human culture is a cloud lifting itself apparently above the earth, beyond the trees, beyond the mountains, beyond the region which birds can reach, until at last it seems as if it would float away to another world, but never escaping the law of gravitation and falling back in broken segments upon the earth again.

Human culture is a ladder reaching up toward heaven, but however high it reaches, never resting its top against the foundations of the heavenly world. Christianity is a ladder flung out from the gate of heaven, its top securely fastened to the heavenly battlements, its lower rounds touching the earth; and on this ladder, as on the ladder of Jacob’s early vision, the angels of the Lord ascend and descending, Christ brings to our struggling souls the power of a higher kingdom and thus becomes the Head of a new humanity.”

Homming Pigeons

One Saturday afternoon I had gone out to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo to enjoy the exquisite color-scheme of that most beautiful of all American exhibitions. As I was walking about enjoying the fountains and the stately and the rainbow tints of the picturesque Spanish architecture with a perfect cerulean sky overhead, some men brought out a huge wicker cage from which they released a dozen or so homming pigeons. The pigeons arose, made many circles, and then each one started back to the place from which it had been brought. One flew toward Nashville, Tennessee; another toward Toronto; one headed for Chicago, another for New York, etc. Later telegrams were received which revealed that each bird had gone unerringly to its home. How did they know which way to go? I looked up and there was no guide board in the sky saying, “This way to Nashville.” or “This way to Chicago,” and there was no traffic officer, but nevertheless they went home. How did they do it unless these lonely wayfarers away from home were guided by a personal God? William Cullen Bryant in his ode, “To a Waterfowl,” expresses our faith and strengthens our confidence:

“He who from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight.”
In the long way that I must tread along,
Will guide my steps aright.

Sympathy

What may be a familiar incident is related as follows by Mr. Marion Lawrence: Our esteemed William Reynolds used to tell the story of a man who was traveling in a sleeping car, with a crying baby. The baby cried until the middle of the night, when some of the passengers became quite out of patience and one man said to the father of the baby, "You should have left that baby at home with its mother; a man has no business to be traveling with a crying baby. We paid good money for our sleeping accommodations and we have a right to sleep."

The man responded that he wished he could leave that baby with its mother but that the mother was dead and was in her coffin in the baggage car. He was taking her to the East to bury her where he married her. Upon hearing this, a great, stalwart fellow rolled out of the upper berth and asked the father of the baby how long he had been on the train. He replied that he had been there two nights and had no other wish to travel. He thought the baby was sick, but was doing his best to keep the baby quiet. The ble-hoated man replied, "Give me that baby! You need rest and sleep more than that baby does. We have some babies at our house, and I think I can keep the baby quiet while you sleep." He took the crying baby on his arm and, in a low, sweet voice, even if it was a man's voice, sang to the baby, as he walked up and down the aisle, "Hush, my dear; lie still and slumber, holy angels guard thy bed." By and by, the baby's cries began to subside. They soon changed into a coo, and then the baby fell asleep. The tired father was so elated that night was six feet tall in his stocking feet and probably weighed two hundred pounds! The world needs that sort of sympathy.

Power of Example

At the outbreak of the Civil War I was permitted to go to the county town and see the boys enlist. We desired to raise one company in our county that day and excitement was running high. Two prominent lawyers were candidates for Congress and one of these men had an appointment with the meeting. He became very eloquent, in the common acceptance of that term, but the conclusion of his remarks was, "Go, boys, go!" In some strange way this speech chilled the enthusiasm of the audience and no one responded to the call for volunteers at the close. His rival was then introduced to the audience and in his panegyrics of eloquence he made the American eagle scream, but the conclusion of his speech also was, "Go, boys, go!" and at its close not a man responded to his summons for volunteers.

At last Silas Davis, a Baptist deacon whom everybody in the county knew and loved, arose and said, in substance, "Boys, God has been good to me; he has given me threescore years and ten, and I offer Him very little in offering the remnant of my life. He has given me a good home, good neighbors and the best country the sun ever shone upon, and rather than see the old flag hauled down I propose to go and help save the Union. Come, boys, and enlist with me." Mr. Davis had not reached the table before thirty men were on their feet, shouting, "You stay, Uncle Silas. We will go and save the country!" and in thirty minutes after this good man had spoken his word and sealed it by his signature, two companies had been enlisted instead of one. — Bishop J. W. Bashford.

The Master's Touch

It was a West-end London drawing room; an auction sale was in progress. It was a small crowd, but many of the great and fashionable were there, for the former master of the house had figured prominently in his day. The auctioneer had reached a violin; he lifted it, rubbed the place where the label should have been, and read out a famous name. Then he began to talk as only an auctioneer can talk, but despite his eloquence nobody would bid more than six guineas for that fiddle dark with age. He was giving up in despair of getting a proper price at all, when the old man came forward. Someone whispered, "Paganini!" and it was the great violinist himself. Up to the table he came. Lovingly he lifted the instrument, and began to play; at first low and soft and pleading, then glad, triumphant, strong, and then wailing and sad. When he had laid it down there was not a dry eye in the room. Six guineas! one hundred, two, three, five, six, seven hundred, and Paganini was the proud possessor of the violin at seven hundred guineas! Without the master touch worth six guineas.

Now, that is a parable. So it is with the human soul. Without the Master's touch, how broken, how worthless, how lost; but with the Master's touch anything is possible. The Lord Jesus Christ has attained guilt for whom no one else had any hope, has attuned them to the harmonies of heaven. And today His touch has still its ancient power. — Thomas Stewart.

Things are not What They Seem

In a certain New England family there were two daughters named Mary and Abigail. Mary, the elder, was wooed by a promising young man named Richard Crane, and her parents approved him highly; Abigail's lover was an awkward lad named John, of whom the parents thought nothing.

The girls were married in a double wedding and, according to the custom of the time, each chose a Bible verse as a specimen of her progress: Mary chose a verse in the Psalms. The meeting house was crowded to capacity, but the AWSAES was the only one who made much of the ceremony. Mary, looking proudly at her man, said, "Mary, bath chosen that good part which shall not be taken from her." Little Abigail raised her brave chin and recited boldly, "John came neither eating nor drinking and ye say he hath a devil."

The last name of Abigail's John was Adams. She was the only woman to become the wife of one President of the United States and the mother of another. — Bruce Barton, in Reader's Digest.

The zeal of God

A strange story was told in the Boston Herald some time ago about the firelight. Hurdy, coming from a port in France, carrying, besides the mineral water in her hold, a number of small wooden cases marked "metallic sodium." The story is long and interesting. Suffice it to say that these cases were the cause of a fire that could not be put out. Several of the cases of mineral water had broken, and suddenly the boatswain saw one of the wooden cases marked "sodium" burst into flames. The more water they poured on the fire, the more intense was the flame. Cases were cast into the sea, only to rebound into the air, flaming balls. The crew had barely time to take to the boats when the fireboat broke in two and disappeared in the sea. Captain and crew learned then that sodium is a metal of peculiar quality. It oxidizes rapidly when water touches it and bursts into flames as soon as the water becomes warm. Water thrown on it to quench it has the contrary effect. It is a fit emblem of enthusiasm like Paul's, which has also a peculiar quality. There was no use throwing cold water on his enthusiasm. One might throw him into a sea of troubles, but he rebounded and burst into a hotter flame of zeal than ever. Perception was only so much fuel to the fire. — Anna Bisignani Bryant.
edurers, artists and poets. In this list are churchmen with varied ratings in the scale of orthodoxy. We find the names of Francis J. McConnell, Daniel A. Pating, S. Parker Cadman, Galus Glenn Atkins, Rufus M. Jones, Shailer Mathews, Newell Dwight Hills, Joseph Fort Newton and many others. Also we note the names of such blatant agnostics as H. L. Mencken, who is inseparable from his magazine, Mercurv; Clarence Darrow, Luther Burbank, Bertrand Russell, H. G. Wells. Here are two or three names that are unmistakably Hebrew; and there we notice among the poets, Raving-dranath Tagore, the famous philosopher from India, Maurice Maeterlinck, and among the writers, Frank Crane, Sir Walter Scott, Victor Hugo; no they are not all contemporary. It is a book that I would prize highly not only as a reference book but a source book of illustrative matter for an Easter sermon.

Now I shall mention (not review) three or four books on themes that should be of special significance to every preacher. No matter what tune you play in your Easter sermons, believe it will be profitable for him to read two or three good solid books, if for no other reason than to give a proper background to his messages and to his thinking. There are two books which fortunately the publishers, Richard B. Smith, Inc., have put into their Dollar Library. The first of these is old classic, "The Trial and Death of Jesus Christ," by Dr. James Stalker, a masterly exposition of the trystrayal, arrest, trial and crucifixion of Jesus; as the sub-title indicates, it is a devotional diary of our Lord's passion.

Doubtless the following quotation from the Author's Preface will indicate more clearly than anything we could say, some suggestion of Dr. Stalker's point of view in his preparation of the book: "I have to confess that some even of the most famous books on the Passion are to me intolerably tedious, because they are written, so to speak, in oh's and ah's. Surely this is not essential to devotion. The scenes of the Passion ought, indeed, to stir the depths of the heart; but this purpose is best attained, not by the narrator displaying his own emotions, but, as is shown in the incomparable model of the Gospel, by the faithful exhibition of the facts themselves."

First published in 1908, Dr. W. M. Clow's, "The Cross in Christian Experience," is one of the few books that never should be allowed to go out of print and one which every preacher should own, not to read through and check off his list, but to read from cover to cover once a year, for it is a book with depths that one cannot hope to plum at, no matter how often read. W. H. Griffith Thomas, that doughty Bible expositor, says of it, "If the substance of this book was received and reproduced by the ministry of our churches, it would put iron in our blood; heart into our work, and joy into our people." The volume comprises twenty-five sermons planned and arranged so as to present the Atone ment in all its aspects. It is this reviewer's humble judgment that this volume should head the list of books on the Cross and the Atone ment.

An unusual volume, a 1929 publication, by Harper and Brothers ($2.50) is "If I Had Only One Sermon to Preach on Immortality," edited by William L. Stilger. The book is a symposium of twenty-three sermons by as many preachers of note, some of them pronounced fundamentalists, several of them avowed modernists and a number unclassified. The first one is by W. E. Biedermann on the text, "If a Man Die Shall He Live Again?" Others are by Lynn Harold Hough, Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, Charles E. Jeffer son, whose writings are so popular with preachers, Daniel A. Poling, Merton S. Rite, Frederick F. Shannon, and others equally well known. In the 340 pages of this volume I venture to say there is a rich deposit of usable material.

And I almost let my model's little contribution go to the editorial office without mentioning a really worth while series of Easter messages, entitled "The Risen Life," written by Rev. Dr. Shelby Corlitt, our N. Y. P. S. General Secretary. These sermons appeared as the March issue of the Nazarene Monthly and were also published in booklet form to sell at 25c each. I wish that many of our pastors would send for a number of these booklets and sell them out to their people. They are so helpful, so constructive, so devotional; and they are strong messages; they read just like Brother Corlitt's sermons impress his hearers—forceful, dynamic, backed by conviction and independent thinking.

I KNEW a minister once, who wrote some glorious and stirring things about revivals, and very eloquently too. Thousands of copies of his appeals were circulated far and wide; but when a revival of the Word of God burst forth like a flame in his own neighborhood, his face was seldom seen in one of the meetings. Many of the vilest sinners in town were getting converted and vast numbers were under the deepest concern about their eternal interests. A large body of faithful men—who had never printed a line on the subject of revivals—entered into the work "heart and soul"; while our gentleman of the pen, to avoid responsibility, or escape observation, set out for a "short excursion" into the country. There he continued, "enjoying himself," and entertaining a positive glow of complacency, while his brethren, pale and worn, were pushing the battle to the gates or improving the victory to the utmost of Gospel power.

"It is not to be wondered at that there are men to be found, in great numbers, who speak well of revivals. The Christian Church owes its origin and present "standing" in the world to such extraordinary dilations of the Holy Spirit. If she is to advance to glory and victory it must be done by the same instrumentation. The Church requires more than "good speaking and writing." She needs the same soul-stirring, soul-winning action—powerful and continuous efforts, outward and extraordinary, for the conversion of sinners. That advice of Cicer, to the politicians of his day, is strikingly applicable to the "pen and link heroes and worldly men as their companions" of the present time, with regard to revivals and consequent gathering of sinners to the church: "Let, therefore, the pen give place to the sword; arms to arms; the shade to the sun; and let that virtue have the pre-eminence in the state, by which the state itself geteth the precedence of all other. Let that rule in which the state hath obtained the dominion of the whole world."

manner as when we treat upon particular duties and sins, and endeavor to put men, upon the practice of one and to reclaim them from the other, by arguments taken from the Word of God, and from the nature of particular virtues and vices.

An Ancient Riddle

Adam, God made out of dust,
But thought it best to make me first.
So I was made before the man,
To answer His most holy plan.
My body He did make complete,
But without hands, or legs, or feet.
My ways and actions did control,
But to my body gave no soul.
A living being I became,
And Adam gave me a name.
I from his presence then withdrew,
And more of Adam never knew.
I did my Maker's law obey,
Nor from it ever went astray.
Thousands of years I go in fear,
But never on the earth appears.
For purpose wise, which God did see,
He put a living soul in me.
A curse from me my Lord did claim,
And took from me that soul again.
For when from me that soul had fled,
I was the same as when first made.
And without hands or feet or soul
I traveled on from pole to pole.
I labor hard by day or night,
To fallen man I give great light.
Thousands of people young and old,
Do by my light their way and hold.
No right or wrong can I conceive;
The Scriptures I cannot believe;
Although my name therein is found.
They say I am an empty sound.
No fear of death trouble me,
Real happiness I shall never see.
To heaven I shall never go,
Nor to the grave, nor hell below.
Now, when these lines you closely read,
Go search your Bible with all speed.
For that my name's recorded there
I honestly to you declare.
The authorities in Chicago executed a criminal recently, and considerable space was given to the way he spent his last hours in his death cell.
I understand he was given a chicken dinner, all the cigarettes he could smoke; the watchmen played cards with him in an effort to help him forget his approaching doom. They sat with him in his death cell and did everything they could,
and their sympathy seemed real, yet this man,
utterly shot down a fine, high-class citizen, employed in one of our local banks and all this kindness was shown him in spite of the fact that his victim died without mercy, and left wife, children and friends to mourn the loss.
I got to thinking and comparing this man's last hours with the last night the Son of God spent on earth,ethers was Jesus-Christ's "death cell." He picked three men who he hoped would help him through the hours preceding Calvary.
They forgot Him and fell asleep. One of His friends had betrayed Him for a paltry thirty pieces of silver. Eight of His chosen apostles never went near His "death cell," and the great city over which he had great work to do, in their high life while the Man of Sorrows was bearing their sins. As I meditated on this theme, I brought it home still clearer. He died for my sins; He suffered for me. In the midst of my meditation I felt on my knees and I was moved to ask God to help me to show by my service my appreciation for His sacrifice.

"For me it was in the garden,
He prayed not My will but Thine;
He had no tears for His own grief,
But sweet tears of blood for mine."

I was reading in the Book of Mark the other night about the incident where Peter, James and John beheld Christ's transfiguration. What a blessing that must have been to these three disciples; what a wonderful emotion that would make Peter want to build a tabernacle and re main there forever, and I said to myself, "How similar to people today who get a great revela tion from heaven; their emotions are stirred and they desire to remain at that ecstasy, but as I read on I observe that this blessed experience was not given them simply to stir their emotions but to qualify and equip them to care for poor, broken humanity at the foot of the moun tain. You will remember that the poor, broken hearted father at the foot of the mountain came to the disciples, asking them to relieve his son of his awful condition and they could not,
but on the arrival of Jesus the son was quickly relieved and the father went on his way re joining. Then I said to myself have I not seen churches so wrapped up in the cloak of their Christian experience that they forget a poor sin-sick, heart-broken world? The baptism with the Holy Ghost may be given as primarily to purify the heart, though that I think is an open question, but I am sure that the divine thought was also to equip us to help a prophylactic, world.
I have seen some churches whose few members could get exceedingly happy over the thought of the hour when they got sanctified, but there seemed to be no material, from Sunday to Sun day, on which to work and to whom they could tell the joy of the Lord. Something is wrong somewhere, brethren, as sure as the world, for God never gave us this great grace to consume upon our heirs.

On the day of Pentecost they could not get people into the upper room, but they felt that cam to go out and preach to a multitude and 3,000 accepted Christ that day.

I picked up the following some place and pass it on to my brethren with this comment there must be a reason why the seats are empty.

As announced for tonight, I am to speak to the seats. This has been on my mind for some time. We have special days set apart for old people, children, mothers, college, missionary, etc., but none for the seats. I shall divide my talk into two parts: Things Praisingworthy, and Things Blame-worthy.

I. Praisingworthy Things. (Some things which cannot be said of all men.) You are always present. No matter what the weather is; it is never too cold, warm, wet or dry for you. No matter what is going on in the other churches, you are always here. I can depend on you.
You do not attend the theater, do not dance or play cards, do not go to Sunday baseball or Sunday picnics, nor even go visiting. You show by your presence that the church is always on the side of righteousness and truth. You never miss preaching, prayer meeting, Sunday school or the missionary meetings. I notice that there are two kinds of seats: full and empty. I appreciate your presence, but would rather there were less empty ones and more full ones. I must praise you empty ones for this one thing; you are always here and right up here in front. I wish the full ones would crowd you out so there would be none in the service.

Your department is good. You never disturb the service by coming in late. You are always on time, especially you empty ones. We did not think of giving you a coat of oil last spring.
Perhaps if you had a new dress you would come late so that all could see it. You look back round when anyone comes in late. You never whisper or read books or papers to let the preacher know that you are not interested in what he has to say. You never go to sleep during the sermon. You never find fault with the preacher nor his sermon. You are a peace able set. You never quarrel among yourselves.
You never get mad and stay away from church because you don't like each other. You are quiet, loving seats. I commend you for it. You are established, firm, stable. You are not like the moon, which changes every quarter. You are not chasing after something new all the time. You are loyal. I can depend on you. Nevertheless,
I have some things against you.

II. Blame-worthy Things. The service is of no help to you. My efforts are all a failure.
You are no better than a year ago. You are hard, unsympathetic. You have no feeling. You are not moved by anything I say. You do not seem to appreciate my efforts nor the sacrifice
I make for you. You pay no attention to what I say. It only goes to the surface. You are no help to me in my work. You never invite any one to church, visit the sick, bring me flowers, nor speak to me. You are so hard, so indifferent, so inactive. People ought to sit on you.

You never pray. You are always at prayer meeting but never take part. Neither do you pay. God loves a cheerful giver, but you never give a cent. You would let the preacher starve.
A preacher complained that his people did not support him except with wormy apples. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

You seats are not sociable. You never speak to each other, nor to strangers. You never visit each other nor the newcomers. You are no in spiration to the preacher. You are so cold and still and formal that a preacher may study and be filled with the Spirit and preach with power, to the Lord's treasury. If so, now that you must part with it, surely you will try, as far as possible, to make good the loss he has sustained.

If you have neglected this duty, why not add a codicil to your will this very day, so that when the will is read in the presence of a court of heaven, and the Master listens for His name, He will not be disappointed, but looking upon you with a smile of joy will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?"

There is only one thing better than this, and that is to give the Lord His share while you live, and "enter into the joy of the Lord" here on earth. Said one who had just given $50,000 to a Western college, "I cannot tell you what I have enjoyed. It is like being born into the kingdom again."

Besides, if you give now, you will avoid possible contingencies whereby the Lord's portion might be lost. Dr. J. O. Holland relates that, after the Chicago fire, three friends met, two of whom had been burned out of house and home and the immense accumulations of successful lives. One of the unfortunate said to the other two, "Well, thank God, there was some of my money placed where it could not burn"; saying which, he turned upon his heel and went on a pedestalt.

His brother in misfortune turned to his companion and said, "That man gave away last year nearly a million of dollars; and if I had been wise I should have done the same thing."

Be your own executor, then, and give while you can.

There are a number of people in our churches who should remember the church in their wills, not that they should neglect their family, but they should not neglect the church. Let every pastor who reads this do his best to lay it upon the hearts of his people. First church, Haverhill, Mass., is out of debt because two men were induced to make their wills by the now sainted I. W. Hansen. There are thousands upon thou-

EASTER CHURCH MEMBERSHIP Campaign

Easter time has been used for years as a time to recruit members for the church. For weeks before this time a definite campaign has been waged to get in touch with those desiring to unite in membership. In the Church of the Nazarene we must pursue a somewhat different course of action because of our applicants having to be interviewed by the membership committee. Many of our pastors are equipped with membership application blanks and these are handed to prospective members. On these blanks is a brief statement of belief and the general rules. In this manner the applicant knows what he is joining and has some appreciation for what membership means in our church.

There is a decided advantage in taking in a large class of members at one time. Why can this not be done on Easter Sunday? There are perhaps numerous members of your Sunday school classes who are eligible for membership and who seem to desire to join. The associate membership of the N. Y. P. S. furnishes a list of prospects from which members may be secured. Those friends of the church who enjoy our services may be glad to join if the matter is properly presented to them.

Take time to make your own reception of members impressive. One church in one of our connections gives each new member a copy of the Manual, and a subscription to the Herald or Nazarene. This is money well invested. Give opportunity at least for the members of the church board, the elders, and other leading members of the church to welcome these new members by a warm, hearty handshake. Make them feel that they are joining something worth while, and that you appreciate their uniting with us in membership.

SECURING MEMBERS IN THE REVIVAL

Recently it was our privilege to attend a revival service conducted by Rev. L. A. Windsor, the Ozark evangelist. He had a rather unique way, at least among Nazarenes, for securing the names of those desiring to unite with the church. After he had given his altar call he had the congregation sing another verse while those who desired to unite with the church were invited to come sit on the front pew. It was made plain that this did not resolve them into membership, but merely expressed their public desire to unite in membership; and it was only after they had been interviewed by the church membership committee that they would be eligible for membership. They had secured the names of fourteen eligible persons, and the meetings had several more days to run. Perhaps this suggestion may be carried out successfully by pastors and evangelists elsewhere. It is certain that we fall sadly in “Siring the fish,” caught in our revivals; that is, we fail to get our converts into membership. Perhaps a little pressure at the revival time will greatly aid us in tying them up definitely to the church.

REQUIREMENTS FOR A REVIVAL

An editorial in the Christian Advocate, organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, concerning the Spiritual Life Conference gives some pointed remarks on revivals which need to be emphasized. It states, “If a revival comes the lay and the ministry will have to want it and to give themselves to the securing of it. Only by the simple methods of the working of the Holy Spirit will the revival come. No mechanical organization can produce it. Programs and conferences and resolutions will have little bearing on the matter. Spiritual upheavals come by more strenuous methods. The way to have a revival is well known. The difficulty is that we do not like the requirements. There must be penitence, renunciation, faith. The desires of the heart and the plans of life must be brought into accord with the mind of Christ. When laymen and ministers earnestly seek to perform the obligations of followers of the Master there is a stir in the church, and soon afterwards an awakening in the community.”

THE SUNDAY MORNING CHURCH HOUR

An editorial on the above-subject is given in a recent issue of The Christian Advocate. It sets forth what all pastors know to be a somewhat artificial matter that so many different social and humanitarian activities are calling for the pastor to present certain matters of public concern on the Sunday morning congregation. It appears at times that these requirements unless some born to an end will equal more than the total number of Sundays in the year. All agents for these outsiders know the congregations are usually larger, the collections are more, and the people in general are in a better mood to receive their message in the Sunday morning hour. The note struck by the editor that needs emphasis is this, “Let all things due to be done by the churches have their place, but also save the Sunday morning hour for worship. Let it be God’s hour. Give humanity many other hours.” To which we say Amen.

TRY THIS IN YOUR PRAYERMEETINGS

Several of our pastors have been successful in having a “Book Review” prayer meeting. They have obtained some new book from our Publishing House and have prepared a review of that book to present to their people as a prayer-meeting talk. At the close of the review they have offered the book for sale, and usually a large number of the books have been sold.

There are several advantages to a service of this kind. It gives a change to the regular routine of prayer-meeting service; and variety is the spice of a meeting just as it is the spice of life. It enables the pastor to present to his people such books as they should read. Every pastor knows a reading congregation is much better qualified to meet the needs of the day than a congregation which does not read. It also furnishes an object for the publications from our house to our people.

Within recent months there have been a number of small books issued which will lend themselves well to a service of this kind. Nearly all the issues of the Nazarene Monthly will be useful for this purpose. Among the books recently published which may be used are these: The Life of Dr. P. F. Bresee, by A. M. Hills; The Holy Spirit, by Dr. J. B. Chapman; Helps to the Prayer Life, by W. G. Schurman. And four or five other books which may be furnished on request. These books are neatly bound in paper covers and sell for twenty-five cents each. A small commission is allowed if purchased in quantities over one hundred. This commission over a year's time will enable the pastor to purchase several larger books for his library.

A pastor can know the success of a service of this kind only by giving the review and by having a number of copies of the book on hand to sell at the close of the service. If you are seeking variety for your prayer-meetings, give this a trial.

In a recent issue of the Watchman Examiner, Rev. J. C. Massie gives the following "Suggestions to Evangelists."

The evangelism must never underestimate the ignorance of his audience. Nor must be ever lose sight of the fact that they are men and women, who, through sin carry burdens, are smitten with sorrows, steeped in darkness, and desirous of their own moral sufficiency. The evangelist must be patient and forbearing with the ignorant and the erring.

A redemptive gospel is necessary. An ethical gospel only leaves the sinner struggling in vain to lift himself by his own moral bootstraps to the impossible heights of the perfect example of Christ. What man needs is a Savior, not an example. The gospel offers a new basis on which to reconstruct life. It provides healing for the hurts of sin.

An effective evangelism will make social application of the individual gospel. The redemption of the individual will involve the redemption of the family, the home and society in all their various aspects and movements. The gospel preached in any successful evangelism must be a two-edged sword, cutting both in the direction of the saint and of the sinner.

It must provide comfort for sorrows, strength against temptation, guidance in perplexity, assurance of peace with God and inspiration by which the Christian life is lifted to a higher and holier level. The evangelistic gospel is not a succession of "dons." It is a positive proclamation of holiness and the divine provision of enabling.

The effective evangelism must realize that American paganism is not less real, nor less violent in its opposition to Christ and the gospel than was the paganism of ancient Rome or of modern Japan.

Nothing can be more certain than that the militant proclamation of the gospel will demonstrate that the gospel has power to direct impact on unregenerated men to bring conviction, conversion, transformation, and fill the church and the world with holy rejoicing.

Every effective evangelistic meeting ought to leave the local church reaping direct results in other converts and continuous application for new members for many weeks after its close, and thus permanently carry forward the kingdom of God.

THE PROHIBITION ISSUE

The prohibition issue is becoming more acute each day. The situation should challenge every earnest, godly preacher to throw the weight of his influence with and raise his voice in defense of the prohibition cause. If the pulpit is silent and the wet propaganda is continued to be spread throughout the country in the secular press, we will have lost all for which the prohibition forces have fought over a period of years. Here is some powder for your prohibition gun.

The Human Toll to Drink

And the king appointed for them a daily portion of the king's dainties, and of the wine which he drank (Dan. 1:5). Dr. C. W. Salebye, F. R. C. S., F. R. S., a distinguished physician of Great Britain, furnished the following exhibit of the statistics caused by strong drink. The figures apply to England and Wales alone, and hence are far from giving the full total of the drink mortality throughout the world. Doctor Salebyte says, "The first year of the World War cost us about eighty thousand lives of our soldiers and sailors. But during every year of peace, alcoholic takes at least sixty thousand lives in this country. On the most moderate reckoning it is responsible for one-seventh, or about fourteen per cent of the whole death-rate. This toll of over a thousand lives a week, year in and year out, is three-fourths of the toll exacted by the greatest war in history. Eliminating from the average size of a family, and the known death-rate from alcohol, we find that this destroyer of the people, by its destruction of husbands and fathers, makes 45,445 widows and orphans in England and Wales every year, or over one hundred and twenty-four every day. These figures are an understatement, for they do not recognize the fact that the mortality due to alcohol is really much higher among men than women. We have in this country an infant mortality of about one hundred thousand per annum, and a mortality of infants before birth which is at least as high. It is estimated that not less than half of this antenal mortality, namely, fifty thou- sand lives per annum, is due to syphilis. Over the whole of this colossal loss of life, before and soon after birth, amounting to less than two hundred thousand lives annually, is the trial of alcohol, either doing its deadly work hand in hand with syphilis or destroying life directly on its own account. It is marvelous how quickly prohibition begins to repair the desolations of intemperance."—Abish Leader.

If We Lose Our Government

In an address before the Pennsylvania Sabbath School Association, Miss Margaret Shafter said, "If we lose our American government it will not be through the foreign-born or the sons of the foreign-born, but through the demands for personal liberty of the sons and daughters of the founders of the nation. I would rather see a thousand men carrying the red flag and singing 'The Internationale' on the city streets than to see one hundred representative business men drunk in a nation that says 'Thou shalt not.'--Selected.

Good human laws are not framed arbitrarily, and then thrust on the people. Good laws are discovered. It is so with the prohibition of the liquor traffic. For a long time good people were in trouble and agony over the evil wrought by strong drink. They did not know how to frame a law that seemed to meet the care. Then it came about that they discovered what was God's mind on the matter. They passed the prohibition law, in the name of God, to your knees, and then rise terrible, as an army with banners, and proclaim the truth to the world, that America has pledge its word and will never go back but will lead the whole world to liberty from the world's greatest curse."

A Canadian paper is authority for the statement that Prohibition has no long-lived life in the United States that it has saved insurance companies $250,000,000. The paper also calls attention to the fact that the wages of our three martyred Presidents were drinking men and drank heavily before committing their horrible deeds.

Prohibition a Gorged

Prohibition has been a gorged to this country, and above all to the poorer people. And, most of all, it has been of indescribable value to the women and children of the country. It is the women and children who suffer most, in the end, from the evil effects of liquor on the men, and prohibition has spared the women and children an indescribable amount of suffering. Under prohibition, money which went to the saloon and the liquor seller goes to the stores for clothing for the women and children; it goes into the savings banks by hundreds of millions of dollars each year, it is invested in automobiles and other recreations. Prohibition is a godsend to this country.—Captain Robert Dallas, Steamship Owner.

NOTES AND OBSERVATIONS

By Basel W. Miller

Notes on the News of the Day

The Ten Most Interesting News Stories of the year have been selected by Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press. It is interesting to run back over these items and to note the varied nature of the news for the past twelve months. The first event was the discovery of the remains of Andre's North Pole Aerial Expedition, which for some thirty-three years has remained a mystery. The next was the trans-Atlantic non-stop flight of Coste and Bellonte. We who live here in New York City will never forget the thrill we had in seeing them land at, the Curfus Air Field, some few miles from where I write this story. The winning of the golf championship by Bobby Jones is listed as number three. Of course among us holiness preachers, where there is a pair of golf pants to about every 1933 ministers, that note does not arouse much of a thrill. Next is the story of Gandhi and his nonviolent revolt against the English in India. This is followed by the story of the birth of Lindbergh's heir. The fact at the Columbus, Ohio, penitentiary where three hundred prisoners were burned to death, is sixth in interest. The great drought here in America and its resultant billion dollar loss to the farmers, and the explosion of the English queen of the air, the dirigible H-101, with the death of England's cream of aeronautical talent, form the seventh and tenth stories. While of course the ninth note must be that of the discovery of the new planet, Pluto, which has been hunted for 2,500 years as the ninth planet of the universe, four billion miles beyond the sun. King Carol's return to the throne of Romania comes in for mention, but the life of that king while in exile with his "famous loves" is too filthy to be referred to.

New Year's Night on Broadway was a wilder story than any other told in recent times. (I write an article on New Year's day this story while you will read in April.) All over the city merry-makers were out for a good time, and a loud one. Broadway, especially along where the theaters are located, and around Times Square (Fifty-second Street) was a raging riot of racket at the midnight hour. The horns toured, the whistles whistled, the fog horns creaked out the old year, and the boats and ocean liners welcomed the new with their blasts. In the churches sacred services made memorable this time which symbolizes the passing of time into eternity. The Riverside church (where Fowkik is preacher and Heberlel is pastor) was crowded to its capacity (2,500 people). The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York's outstanding Episcopal church, where Bishop Manning holds forth, counted the old year's death knell. Trinity church heralded the New Year with its chimes (this is the church which all visitors to the world's largest city want to see, old when the country was in its youth, and born with New Amsterdam, located on Broadway at the head of Wall Street), Prohibition officers had a busy time, throwing hips and thus breaking house bottles. While we Nazarenes, a handful in number in a half dozen of our churches, prayed through from the old to the newest member of the household of the years, 1931.

Praying for the Dead is a practice followed by the Catholics, but here is a new shot on the old tale. It seems that Thomas Fortune, a fortune hunter of Wall Street, made an agreement with the Fathers of the Blessed Sacrament in the city, whereby they were to receive a yearly annuity of $12,000, for which sum they were to pray in perpetuity for his soul in purgatory, or maybe Hades. When the amount of money was set aside by the dead one's will, the sum was far below this. Now these priests are suing the estate for the sum of $35,000 which they say is their due. The times have been such that the fathers have been able to get a promise from his maker before he passed on to realms beyond. Here is a Wall Street grangler, whose prize was his soul; he thought he would change the fathers, but they say, "Nothing doing," in the parlance of lower Broadway.

God Among the Scientists is the title of one of the articles in my file care. I have been gathering notes on the statements of the outstanding scientists about God and the nature of the universe. Some day I hope that it shall grow to the proportions of a book on that subject. But many interesting items have been gleaned recently about God's standing among the scientists. Ten years ago it was stated that no scientist believed in a universe controlled by Mind, or God. But this is not true today. Millikan, the world's greatest physicist, has discovered of cosmic rays and photographer of the electron, also president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, receiver of the Nobel Prize for physical research, president of the California Institute of Technology, and holder of scores of other honors, says, that "religion and science go hand in hand." He believes that the universe shall never grow old, wear away, and in a mass of darkness decay, but it is being reeducated continually by these cosmic rays, which is directly the hand of the Creator at work all the time. He finds God among the atoms.

Sir James Jeans, one of the outstanding British scientists in his recent book, The Mysterious Universe, discovers only one tangible reality in this universe of ours, and that is Mind, God. He says that the Creator of the universe must have been a mathematician of the highest order. Among the stary heavens he says God, the Mathematician, ruling.

Sir Arthur Eddington, unexcelled in his field of research, says that no other conclusion is possible to science but the fact that God exists, as the controlling Mind of the Universe.

Mr. Olson, president of the National Association of Chemists, professor at one of our New York universities, teaches a Sunday school class at a Brooklyn Methodist church. He knows that no man can be a chemist and not read the story of the hand of God, the Chemist of the universe, who studies the structure of the earth and its elements.

Einstein, the marveled of the scientists of our age, and as our college freshmen express it, the "side-kick of Newton," whose theory of relativity stands side by side with Newton's law of gravitation, recently spoke over the radio and said that religion and science go hand in hand, and referred to his belief in "cosmic religions." Speaking yesterday, January 4, from San Diego, California, he said that, as Millikan, he believed that religion and science are reconcilable.

Again Dr. W. R. Whitney, director of electrical research of the General Electric Company, made the statement that back of every phenomenon of the universe stood “the will of God,” and so the story goes.

God is receiving better attention at the hands of the greatest scientists of the age than at any other time during the past fifty years. The more wise men know the more they must come back to the conclusions stated in the Bible by men centuries ago, that God is, and no argument is needed to confirm this statement.

I was one of four speakers this past month at a city-wide conference on the subject, “The Challenge of Communism to the Church.” A number of different denominations were represented; various beliefs from the Jews to the Episcopalians were held by those in attendance; four different seminaries sent representatives, the Union Theological Seminary, modernism’s stronghold in the States, the General Seminary, the national training school for the Episcopal Church, the Jewish Seminary, the national school for the conservative Jews of America, and the Biblical Seminary, where, I am told, the Bible is upheld, by as scholarly a set of professors as can be found in New York City. Many interesting things occurred. First, when we entered the hall where the conference convened at the General Seminary, there were wreaths of cigarette stubs to make one think he was in a smoker, instead of a seminary for the instruction of young priests of a Christian church. Next, every group represented smoked freely during the entire conference. Most of the young theologers from the Biblical Seminary, however, did not smoke. Among the Union group a girl was present, who smoked continually. I inquired of those from that seminary if the other girls smoked and they said, “We think nothing of that at all; they all smoke, as far as we know.” This comes from a school whose object is the training of Christian workers.

My theme had to do particularly with the challenge of communism to the church, as representing organized religion. Suffice it to say when I had finished no one doubted the fact that I thought that communism and religion were antagonistic and that there was nothing right at all with the mode in which communism was treating religion—all religions at that. In the discussions that followed, no one else referred to religion again. Other speakers tried to have us think that “communism was not so bad after all.” Others, principally the Jewish element present, thought that communism was the hope of the future. When I challenged them as to the possibility of communism sanctioning the religion of their fathers, they were forced to admit that it would be impossible to be a good communist and an orthodox Jew at the same time.

As I understand it, there are three classes of Jews: the orthodox, old-fashioned Jews of the type of those with whom Jesus dealt, the conservatives, or those who are trying to conserve some of the best of Judaism, and at the same time accept the modern theories, and the radical group, who throw overboard all belief in the authority of the religion of ancient Israel.

Judge Lindsay and Bishop Manning created quite a stir here in the city a week or so ago. Manning preached a sermon in the cathedral against companionship marriage, and openly challenged the theories of Lindsay. The latter being present arpte before the bishop had finished with the prayer, and started to answer the tirade of the speaker. One result of the judge’s being arrested, and a bad mess all the way around for the church. Several of the priests of the Episcopal church—as they desire to be called in this section of the country—made public their disgust with the bishop’s method and belief in the sanctity of the marriage vow, while others upheld his actions. One bishop said that just recently he had united in marriage his daughter and a young fellow, with the definite understanding that the marriage was to be a companionsate one, and could be terminated at the will of either party. Such shows the trend in modern morals.

The American Bible Society held its annual council meeting last month. At the request of General Secretary Fleming I represented our denomination at this council. It was most interesting to meet with men from some twenty or more denominations, scattered over the various sections of the States. We gathered in a room, whose walls were surrounded by hundreds of copies of the Bible in hundreds of different dialects and languages. While we held various beliefs, from the most conservative to the ultra radical, represented denominations far apart in dogma and policy, and came from sections of the nations diverse in customs, still we united as a common brotherhood, grasping hands across the “one Book for all people.” The Bible unites all creeds, and nationalities, all races and dogmas. It was thrilling to sit there and think of these hundreds of dialects and languages into which the Bible had been translated carrying the simple story of the Christ and his cross to these hundreds of tribes and nations. I could see a stream of light, floods of light entering the hills and valleys of those lands, and those that sit in darkness saw the rising light of the gospel. Yes, the entrance of God’s Word given light.

The Psychology of Religious Adjustment, by Calkins, furnishes the preacher with one of the best texts on the subject of the psychology of religion, which I have yet discovered. The author is a professor of psychology in the University of Oregon, but he writes without a bias against religion as so many men in this field have. He gives an interesting discussion of the psychology of sanctification, and one which is fairly true to the facts as he says they exist. Through the book you get a new slant on religious adjustments, the why and the wherewithal, from the human standpoint.

The Art of Thinking, by Dinnott, is one of the most challenging books which I have read in a long time. It is an inspirational book which is different from the usual run. The author, a French priest, a noted scholar, teaches one how to think. You will read it through without wanting to lay the book aside. He will teach you how to read, not only for pleasure but for profit. After all, what is reading but preparation for thinking? We ministers must keep the storehouse of our memories filled with gems gathered from our reading. From this store of treasures our sermons will blossom forth. Sometimes it is hard to read with a purpose, but this author will show you how to do it.

Current Gossip

Not long since one of our friends, known by everyone who reads these lines, said that Will Huff used to visit him, and would say, “I like to come to see you, because I can sit down and gossip.” So let’s look through the current news, the gossip. Wayne Gardner, for years registrar of Eastern Nazarene College, has been elected as President of that institution. It is reported that Miss Bertha Munro, who teaches English at Eastern Nazarene College, refused not long since a salary of $5,000 a year to go to another institution, not Nazarene. Half of that would be a good salary for her at our college. That’s sacrilege—Eastern Nazarene College’s new building, and a massive and expensive proposition, for now we are trying to raise $50,000 in cash, over the blanket mortgage of twice that much already provided for. But it’s worth it. One of the best trained persons in our church is a woman, vice president of our college at Nampa, Idaho, Miss Olive Winchester. She has her doctor’s degree from Drew University—Dr. H. Otis Wiley, editor of the Herald of Holiness, is in Who’s Who for 1931. L. D. Peavy, treasurer of Eastern Nazarene College, has been sick recently—too much strain in helping to raise these times of depression that needed $30,000 cash for the school. Brother Peavy, as we ought to know, is president of the Bahson Statistical Organization, which sells financial information to Wall Street, and such like.—It is said that the Messenger Publishing Company, which published the Scripture Calendar, which you bought the first of the year, spent $80,000 advertising its wares last year. You know of course that Henry Messenger, president of the organization, is a member of our General Board.—Dr. A. M. Hills will never die. Holiness and Power alone warrant that. After all who is it that shall live on, though he is dead? Who is he of whom the passage speaks, "Who is dead yet speaketh?" C. E. Cornell has been in his grave for several years, yet he shall never die. He speaks through his articles, through his books, through his influence.—General Superintendent Chapman said to the writer a few weeks ago, while waiting for his train here in New York City, "It is too bad that Brother Nease (the late president of Eastern Nazarene College) never wrote any. Of course I suppose he always intended to do so some time later." Too bad indeed that his marvelous life, lived so beautifully and powerfully in the reahorsal, never reached out to the thousands of the nations through his writing.—C. E. Cornell said to me the very last year I started writing, "Spread your brains on paper. I started to do that years ago, and see how God has multiplied my influence."

Here and There Among My Sermon Notes
Tonight I am preaching—New Year's night—at our Ulica Avenue church, where Brother O. L. W. has been pastor for the past eight or nine years. It struck me that being the first night of the new year possibly sermon along that line might not be inappropriate. Last night while the whistles were blowing and the old year was passing our soliloquy sang "Sail On." I was impressed with that thought for a sermon. This is the line which I believe and I believe I shall preach it tonight: Theme, "Sail On." Text, "Launch out." Introduction, The Voyage of life—sailing life's boundless sea. 1. Whose ship shall we take? The old gospel ship—its modern, up-to-date, yet it has sailed the voyage for centuries; it is swift, sure, unfuiling. 2. Who shall be the pilot? There is but one Pilot—I shall see my Pilot face to face." Jesus knows the sea, its dangers, the treacherous path to take, he knows the ship, and the haven. 3. What chart and compass? The Guide Book of the ages. It points unerringly to the goal, is undeviating from the true path. 4. What port shall we enter? The port of heaven! We are going to the home port, the Lad without a sea. Conclusion: Then for life's voyage on life's boundless sea let us sail on the gospel ship, guided unerringly for the haven of rest, the home of the soul.

Do You Preach Special Sermons for the great occasions of the year? New Year's, Easter, Mother's day, Decoration day, Children's day, and all the others are around us. A number of years, I have made it a habit to remember these occasions with special sermons. The result is that usually I have sermons for these days prepared months in advance, for, in my reading and preparation thoughts come to me which I fix, or immediately work out into sermon outlines. Then when the day approaches I go over these outlines, try to find the mind of the Spirit, and select the one which seems to please the Lord. The Christmas sermon which I preached this year was a year old. My Christmas message for next year is practically prepared. Easter is taken care of for a year or two in advance. Certainly I shall cast any or all of them aside if the Spirit leads to another subject.—New York City.

SALT FROM MY ATTIC
Monotony is the dagger which kills the virtue of attention. Questioning is a cheap thing; its answering costs.

We all have our hills, but alas! none of us are Homers. When thought causes a disease, thought is the medicine to cure it.

The Roman name by the altar of his gods; the American has his newspaper. You say all ideas are old, so is all marble, but who will deny that new statues are cut? The works of many common men come down to us, because those men lived in the age of great men, as files are embalmed in amber. —John A. Shedd.
