THE PREACHER AND HIS GOSPEL
By the Editor

PAUL occasionally measured things by “my gospel,” suggesting that there was an intimate connection between the gospel and the man who preaches it. The preacher is more than a phonograph record, more than a channel through which saving truth passes. Perhaps he would be glad to be impersonal and passive if the gospel could be the better preached thereby; but he is not given this prerogative. His personality enters into his message and truth is vital only in connection with personality.

So the preacher is preaching himself whether he will or not. And to improve his preaching, the preacher must improve himself.

Take two instances: the preacher who takes on simplicity as an external thing usually becomes silly rather than simple; and the preacher who “works” to be “deep” usually just becomes “muddy” instead. But simplicity and depth are both fruits of sincerity and the way to attain them is to launch out into one’s self—his better self; where condescension and pretense are alike despised.

Yesterday I read a description of a country. But my profit was not as large as it might have been because the writer passed from using the language of the street—not forbidden language, but expressions so common place as to savor of condescension—to the vocabulary of the technician. So that at one moment I felt that he was “beneath” himself, and the next that he was making a flourish of his specialized knowledge. And in either case I could not feel that he was fair with me. I would like for him to tell me what he saw and felt and thought just as “man to man.” I resented what I call his insincerity.

And this is my thought regarding the preacher. He must not let me feel that he is “coming down” to me. And he must not allow me to feel that he is placing before me words and thoughts that he thinks I cannot understand. He must be honest and sincere with me. He must tell me what he knows and feels and thinks. If his message is not adapted to me, then it is a clash of personalities and a call for improvement on the part of us both, and that is what we should want. For it is not truth in the abstract, but the gospel preached in the power of the Holy Ghost, sent down from heaven that saves and inspires and establishes men.

The preacher’s cry to become a better preacher is a cry to become a better man; for the gospel which he preaches, if universal in content, is an interpretation and revelation of the “man sent from God” who proclaims it. And yet I pray more earnestly than ever, “O Lord, make better preachers out of us all!”

GOD’S WILLINGNESS AND MAN’S UNWILLINGNESS

By A. M. Hills

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often have I gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not! (Luke 13:34.)

And when he was come near beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known this thy day, the things that belong unto thy peace, but now they are hid from thine eyes! (Luke 19:41.)

ONE blessed truth of the Holy Word is that Jesus is a picture of God—God manifest in the flesh. Philip saith unto him, “Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, “Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father.” Jesus revealed the Father’s Love; He revealed the Father’s Mercy; He revealed the Father’s Sympathy; He revealed His Indignation over sin.

1. We see in the text the Willminess of God to save all men.

“For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son.”

“Come unto me all ye that labour, and I will give you rest.”

“Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.”

“A well of water springing up unto eternal life.” Jesus spoke these words to the fallen woman of Samaria.

Jesus forgave a thief and murderer on the cross. Is Jesus doing such work now? Yes. Everywhere.

Valentine Burke was an old-time burgher, with a kit of tools and a gun always ready. His picture was in many a rogues’ gallery. Twenty years of his life had been spent in prison. He was a big strong fellow with a hard face and a terrible tongue curing sheriffs and jailers. Moody was holding his first meetings in St. Louis, publishing every word, at the same time that Burke was in the St. Louis jail waiting trial for a deed of daring. How the Jailer at Phillips Got Caught! was the headline of Moody’s sermon one day. The paper was providentially thrown into Burke’s cell and that phrase caught his eye. “Phillipis,” he said, with a chuckle, “that’s a town in Illinois. I’ve been there.” But when he found out that he was reading a sermon, he threw the paper down in a rage and cursed and passed his cell like an enraged tiger. But God got a grip on his heart. He read the sermon through, and said, “Twenty years I’ve been a jailbird. I’ve lived a dog of a life. I’m getting tired of it. What is it to be saved anyway? If there is any such God as that preacher is telling about, I’ll find it out if it kills me.” About midnight, after hours of remorse, and agony of prayer, he found Him. The next morning he spoke kindly to the guard and gained the favor of the jailer, and told him of his conversion. The sheriff said to the deputy, “Jim, keep your eye on Burke. He’s playing the pious dodger. Next thing you know he’ll be breaking jail.”

At the trial, through failure of evidence, Burke was discharged. He started out in the world with the stamp of sin on his face, but with Christ in his heart, hunting for work, and finding none. He prayed for a new face and God gave it to him. He again came to St. Louis, discouraged but still holding on to God: He was sent for by the sheriff who asked him, “Have you kept your religion?” “Yes, sir,” was the reply. “Burke,” said the sheriff, “I have had you shadowed every day you were in New York, for I thought you were a fraud. But I know you have lived an honest Christian life, and I want you to be deputy sheriff.” When he died he was mourned by the Christians of St. Louis as a man of peace. Such cases are everywhere. There are thousands of them.

Jesus sanctified the people then. He prayed for them, and died for him. He commanded His disciples to tarry. Is He doing it now? Yes, in ten thousand hearts. He has cleansed the hearts of drunkards, tobacco-enslaved, morphine victims, gamblers, hot-tempered people, and the fretful.

II: Notice the unwillingness of men.

“How oft would I—but ye would not.” He would gladly have healed every passed sinner, every fallen woman, every thief in all Palestine. He would gladly have enfranchised himself in the love of every woman’s heart—as He did in the heart of Mary. He would have taken the greed and the hate and the envy and ambition and murder out of every ruler’s heart as He did out of Nicodemus and Joseph. He would gladly have saved all the people as He did His disciples. But they would not.

It is so now. God never invades the sacred precincts of the human will. In its own little sphere it is omnipotent. There is no such thing as saving a man against his will. Salvation and compulsion are contradictory terms. A man can resist God and go to death and hell in spite of a heavenly Father’s compassion and a Savior’s dying love, and all the pleadings and importunities of the Holy Ghost.

If people are not saved now it is because they will not be. Every drunkard could be saved as well as the few. Jesus was willing to sanctify all His followers. He told 500 to tarry and wait, but only 120 waited and received the Holy Ghost. So now, people sit side by side; some accept, and some reject.

III. The fate of those who will not have the blessings of God.

It was something awful. Jesus foresaw it, and it well-nigh broke His heart. He saw the city and wept over it saying, “If thou hadst known.” They had rejected Christ, their Passover. In gorgeous robes the priests still blew their silver trumpets, and sent the heaviest charges and their unmeaning litanies. They had rejected the spotless Lamb of God, and in blindness of heart were sacrificing unmeaning lambs upon their rejected altars. The blood of Christ had been rejected, and the blood of their now-unmeaning and worthless sacrifices was still flowing, and the smoke of unavailing offerings was still ascending; but it was sweet incense to God no longer. They still lifted the voice of prayer, but God would hear their prayers no more.

An incredible number of Passover pilgrims gathered in the doomed city. There was a few hours of hushed silence; but it was the ominous silence that preceded a storm. Then he drew a line of circumcambulation around the doomed city, and began to crucify all the deserters who fled to him. They crucified Jesus and now they are crucified.

They would not have Jesus the bread of life; now they have no bread and the story of their famine is the most horrible in all literature. Mothers lost their maternal instincts and devoted their own children like hungry wolves. Whole houses were filled with unburied dead, which brought an awful pestilence. The city became a cage of furious madmen, a city of howling human wildbeasts, and cannibals—a human hell! They had cried to Pilate, “His blood be on us and on our children.” And now, amid shrieks and flames and suicide and massacre, the temple is taken. The great altar of sacrifice is heaped with the slain and the courts of the temple swam deep in blood—six thousand women and children with a cry of despair and screams. of terror perish amid the blazing ruins of the city, and 101,700 were taken prisoners to be sold as slaves or to the fighting wild beasts in the amphitheater. Thus was appalled and exclaimed, "It is the hand of God." Brother, if God dealt so with them for rejecting His Son, if we do the same, what may He not do to thee and me?

In this generation when there is so much preaching of the sweet gospel that was ever preached, many are indulging in the awful luxury of saying, "No! No!" to God. Where is this going to end? Some day God will turn a deaf ear to them.

Harry B. was often pleased with 'by a godly mother to give his heart to God. He answered, "O all I want is five minutes before I die to say, 'God have mercy on me.'" In a few months Rev. George Kulp was sent for to pray with him for he was dying. He had not prayed a minute before the poor dying man said, "Tell George not to pray too long. I'm in such agony I can't stand it." He held five minutes, but he couldn't pray.

A company of young men were in a revival, and resisted all appeals. They finally covenanted together that they would never ask anyone to pray for them. Time rolled on. Mrs. Williams, who was holding a revival in a certain city, was sitting at dinner one day. Someone ran to her from a house across the street to compel and pray with one of those young men who was dying. She went, "Pray, pray, pray," came from the dying lips. She was a wonderful woman in prayer. She knelt and tried to pray but she could not. "Pray, pray pray!" She knelt and tried again, and the third time, but the Spirit would not help to pray. The young man had resisted the Spirit, and when he wanted prayer it was too late.

And God has shown to the needy hearts of many of you Christians the meaning and importance of sanctification. And you have been saying, "No," to the Spirit. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan said at Keswick: "I will say now backsliding begins more often in this tent than anywhere else in England. It is on the heights of the mountain where the light is shining that the wrong choices are made. I believe that up and down in the land there are hundreds of men and women who have been to Keswick and are infinitely worse ever since. The call came and they did not obey it. That is the tragedy of it. Every convention the spiritual mountaintop creates a crisis and ever after it is higher or lower. Which shall it be?"

The seeking soul comes face to face with absolute surrender, full consecration, and the death of the carnal mind. If one shrinks back and refuses to pay the price, the end will be open backsliding and ultimate death.

Dr. Vorster of Loveland, Colo., had twenty holiness people who held weekly prayermeetings in the church. He yielded to the persuasion of carnal members and turned the prayermeeting out of the church. They went to the general prayermeeting. After a year, he confessed that they were the strength of the church prayermeeting. He went to a holiness campmeeting and heard the truth again. He was called to Longmont to be pastor. His fashionable, worldly wife moved him to preach against sanctification. In two weeks he died wringing his hands and saying, "I'm a lost man. I'm a lost man."

THE KIND OF SERMON I LIKE

One that tells me wherein I have erred and suggests a better course for me to follow.

One that exhorts Christ as the Savior of the world.

One that makes me want to do something.

One that sits to act. If I go home without any desire, created by the sermon, to do something, to act upon its suggestion, I feel that my time has been poorly spent.

One that never antagonizes another religious sect or creed. Never unjustly or destructively criticizes an honest conviction or an honest doubt. There is proper fury, but with an honest doubter but to unjustly ridicule from the pulpit is abusive. There is a correct way to deal with the honest conviction of another who we believe is wrong, but to criticize destructively from the pulpit is cowardly as well as un-Christian.

One that gives me some food for thought, that leaves something for me to figure out for myself, and does not try to do my thinking for me.

One that, when it portrays the attributes of God, causes me to see Him as a kind, loving, compassionate, forgiving Father and not a wrathful tyrant.

One that makes me love my fellowmen a little more.—DENNIS W. FOREMAN, in Religious Telescope.
David improved and introduced musical instruments into the service of God, so these men devised and fitted them for luxury and sensuality. But artificial music creates no divine harmony. It weakens the nature and ministers to the folly of men. When men sing instead of weeping, when mirth is unreasonable, unbridled, and licentious, it is void of everything that dignifies the mind and elevates the soul to God.

'There's not a string attuned to mirth.'

In their revelry of song, they indulged in wine not in moderate measure in cups but using large vessels. They fast in riotous pleasure they had no thought for the sufferings and afflictions of their nation. Selfish pleasure blinds the eye to the burdens and the toils endured by others. There is a staleful pleasure which ministers to the well-being of man, but when pleasure is carried to excess when it but for its one end and aim the pampering of self, it tears the heart and conscience to the ill of others, and it becomes unlawful. Southey gives as the criterion of true pleasure the following: 'Would you judge of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of pleasures, take this rule: Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, subdues the spirit of God, destroys the love of all holy and religious things; in short, whatever increases the strength and authority of your body over your mind, that thing is sin to you, however innocent it may be in itself.'

For all these sins, for their ease, their pride and confidence, their selfish indulgence and indifference, judgment was coming. Already the wrath of the Lord on their God was uttered against them. Their arrogance was abhorred and their palaces only stirred the sentence of hatred and condemnation.

'So comes a reckoning when the banquet's o'er, The dreadful reckoning, and men smile no more.'

In this sentence of doom they were committed to captivity, yea, among the very first they were to be taken. Never before shall God, nor was, to be of the scenes that should surround these captives. In the palace where the throng had met, where there had been revelry and the song of the viol, would come the plague, and even though ten men had been left therein, they would fall beneath its deathly grip. As they fell one by one, and a kinman takes up a dead man to perform the rite of burning seeking to know whether there may be others still in the house that should be carried forth, he calls to one in the 'innermost parts' in sepulchral tones, 'Is there yet any with thee?' As Pusey gives the picture, this man in the inner recess of the house was the one survivor of the ten, and he too, sick. The question, is there yet any with thee? inquires whether there was any alive, to succor, or dead, to burn? There was none. All, even the bowels, had now been removed; one only remained, all the harm, sin, and shame, in that abode of luxury, one only in the extremity of its untainted chambers. Probably the sick man was going to speak of God. The uncle breaks in upon his NOT with Hasil! for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord! Times of peace are, with the most, times of religious despair. They who had not feared God in their prosperity, do nothing but fear him then. 'Fear, without love, turns men more away from God. He feels then the presence and power of God whom he had forgotten. He edicts Him as the author of his miseries, but, not having known Him before, he knows Him now in no other relation. The word then, 'for not to be mentioned is the name of the Lord,' are very profound words. 'It is useless to name Him now. We did not name Him in life. It is not for us to name him now, in death.'

'How different are the two pictures given us. In one we have all the ease and luxury of material wealth, all the mirth of wine and song, in the other the midnight of despair and death without hope and without God. Yet he who shares the one, shares also the other.'

'With equal pace imperial fate Knocks at the palace as the cottage gate.'

'So does a reckoning when the banquet's o'er.
The dreadful reckoning, and men smile no more.'

In this overwhelming disaster that is to sweep over the land all will be included; the palaces will fall, and also the little houses shall be rent with eights. The rich with their profane debauchery and the poor man with his humble abode, but the disaster falls primarily for the sins of the rich.

'Should they think it strange that such evil was to befall them? Did they not know that the providences of God were unalterable? Did they not know that He ruled in righteousness and truth? Did they ever see horses run upon a cliff? We make the playmen try to drive his oxen thither! Such a thing would be absurd. They all knew that right well. But did they not know also that it was equally absurd to seek gain from injustice and oppression, to which God had annexed loss and woe, temporal and eternal? More easy to change the course of nature, than the course of God's providence or the laws of His just retribution. They had changed the sweet laws of justice and equity into the gall of oppression, and the hateful fruit of righteousness, whereas they had received the seed from God, into the life-destroying poison of sin. Better to have played the pack with even for good! For now, where they looked for prosperity, they found not barrestness, but death!'—Pusey.

Adopted to this folly of theirs in thinking that the laws of justice and equity might be turned aside at the first time they believed in that which actually had no existence, "a thing of nothing," that which had no reality in fact. They thought they had a strong kingdom and mighty power was theirs, that they had won this by their own strength, when already the nation stood on the horizon which would bring doom and destruction upon their land from the north to the south.

'Such was the sentence of judgment upon Israel, and such is the sentence not only upon nations who defy the laws of God and man, but also upon individuals. To disregard the principles of equity and justice and fail to let the heart beat with love and sympathy for the burdens of others, to live in selfish ease and contented pride will ever bring the pronouncement of condemnation.'

'Lord, bend the way the Savior went, By lane and cell obscure,
And let love's treasures still be spent,
Like His, upon the poor.'

'Like Him, through scenes of deep distress,
Who bore the world's red weight,
We, in their crowded loneliness,
Would seek the desolate.'

'For Thou hast placed us side by side
In this. That Thy followers may be tried,
The poor are with us still.'

—William Crosswell.

In seeking for texts, there are two that stand out very distinctly in this chapter. The first one is found in verse one, "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion." What more do we read of the people of the word of the text, "At ease in Zion," and sub-divisions as practical needs suggest may be used.

There are those who are at ease in Zion, being negligent regarding their own spiritual progress and advancement. Moreover, oftentimes they are at ease without zeal for the welfare in spiritual matters of the community in which they live and finally they may be at ease with respect to the general interests of the church, the extension of the kingdom at home and abroad, the great missionary interests.

The other outstanding text of this chapter expresses the thought of the foregoing text in a more specific way. It is the last half of verse six, "They are not privileged for the affliction of Joseph." No spiritual burden might be used for the theme if we desired to apply it especially to our own people. Then we could follow with a development, first along the line of the responsibility resting upon the Christian to carry a spiritual burden, the privilege entailed in carrying such a burden, that whereby we enter into the sufferings of Christ, and the fruit resulting from such a burden. In connection with this text it might be of interest to note the outline given by Hastings, he gives three thoughts as suggested by the passage, first "an appeal to the feelings"—in the word Joseph. The word Joseph is a synonym for "the afflicted" of several tribes; among them the chief were those of Manasseh and Ephraim, descended from Joseph so the mention of Joseph here is an appeal to patriotism—Joseph the great ancestor of these tribes, the favored by Jehovah, the idol of the people. Then Hastings continues in giving in his next point the statement of fact—"the affliction of Joseph," explaining that we are responsible to see the dark shadows in the lives of others and bear a burden for them. Finally there is the third charge given.

Other thoughts might be brought from texts in this chapter, the evils of unbridled pleasure and impenitence might be dwelt upon by using verses 3-6, and the folly of trusting in our own strength or that which is wrought by our own power might be deduced from the reproach, "We rejoice in a thing of nought."
A Prison Prayer—Opens Burma

Soon after Abraham Judson reached Burma he was arrested as a prisoner of war by the Burmans, who were at war with the English. Although he was not an Englishman, but an American, he obtained no exemption. Judson spent 21 months in prison, fever-ridden and subject to miasmatic brutality. No doubt reading of Peter's experience is what greatly heartened the apostle to Burma—the consciousness that though man seem to be against him, God was surely present in power and potency. His bridle was his constant inspiration and she did all that it is possible for a human being to do in such circumstances. She was perfectly familiar with the Burman language and of a presence that won respect even among barbarians, so that she walked unharmed in the midst of a hostile city with no earthly protector.

While Mr. and Mrs. Judson were persons of prayer, their persons were prayer—the righteous personality that stuck to high duty and remained faithful to high tasks. Prayer plus work is the running sum of the story of every missionary conquest. We are sometimes under the impression that we are doing a great work in the world when in reality we are merely pattering around some big thing God has given us to do.

Christ, the Worker

Rev. M. G. Guselnic in writing in The Christian Herald, on the above topic, says, “Jesus was consecrated in His work. Everything He did was of first quality. He didn’t have to be watched. He didn’t have to be prorogued. If all workers were as He, there would be no need of time-clock; of overseers; and of the whole system of keeping check on labor. Fidelity costs. Faithfulness in the kingdom of heaven will be properly rewarded. ‘Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.”

The whole life of Christ was one of consecration. “He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.” He spent His strength in ministry to the multitudes. He was in truth, “His brother’s keeper.” He has called us to the same task.

He said, “Go, labour in my vineyard.” He didn’t say, “Go, and sit down in my vineyard under the vines, and eat the delicious grapes,” but He said, “Go labor.” If we, as Christians, worked more earnestly and zealously for Christ, we would enjoy our spiritual work more, and He would have an abundant increase of fruit.

Work—thank God, for the might of it, the honor, the joy, the delights of it. Work that springs from the heart’s desire, setting the soul and the brain on fire.

O, what is so good as the heat of it? And what is so glad as the best of it? And what is so kind as the stern command, Chalkeene brain, and heart, and hand?

Bible Meaning of the Seven Graces

The following from Adam Clarke is suggestive: Virtue—Courage or fortitude, the energy to be used in the Christian calling.

Knowledge—True wisdom by which your faith will be increased and your courage directed and preserved from degeneration into rashness.

Temperance—Self-control;—Keeping every scene under proper restraint, and never permitting the animal part to subjugate the rational.

Patience—Bearing all trials and difficulties with an even mind, enduring in all, and persevering through all.

Godliness—Piety toward God; a deep reverential, religious fear; not only worshiping God with every becoming outward art, but adoring, loving and magnifying Him in the heart; a disposition indispensable to salvation.

Brotherly Kindness—The strongest attachment to Christ’s flock; feeling each as a member of your own body.

Charity—Love to the whole human race, even to your persecutors.

The Bible, the Greatest Book in the World

The Literary Digest said: “Translated into six hundred languages, the Bible is more read in China than Confucius, more read in India than the Vedas, more read in Italy than Virgil, more read in Greece than Homer. Recent archaeological research verifies every line of Scripture.”

Henry Ward Beecher once said, “The Bible stands alone in human literature in its elevated conception of manhood, in character and conduct. To know the Book, not only theoretically but practically and experimentally, to enjoy the Salvation that it teaches, is the greatest knowledge, and will cure the ills of the world.”

The “Amen Corner”

Original Methodism was considered peculiar because of the “Amen Corner.” Here gathered a number of substantial Christian men and women, who responded to the “leading points of the preacher with a vociferous Amen!” But this corner has at times been abandoned by the Methodists. A few Amens come from the congregation nowadays, but not many. The Nazarenes are making a heroic effort to perpetuate the Amens. The following relative to the original Amen Corner will be of unusual interest.

Notable amongst the corners of old London is that denoted “Amen” (writes P. H. Dibdin in T. P.’s and Castell’s Weekly.) You come across it very surprisingly, perhaps, after an altercation with your publisher, or a disappointment in not securing the exact book you want, and then you will find yourself at the end of Paternoster Row in this little paradise, a green oasis in the midst of turbulent streets and noisy crowds. Whence did it derive its name?

This evidences connected with the nomenclature of Paternoster Row, Ave Maria Lane, and Creed Lane. It must be remembered that a ball surrounded the precincts of St. Paul’s Cathedral, and the famous row was just outside the boundary. In mediaval times the church used to favor processions, and often the clergy of St. Paul’s, attended by choristers at various times, were accustomed to perambulate the streets nigh the cathedral and the singers chanted as they went. When they turned into the narrow thoroughfare they commenced to sing the Paternoster, and when they came to Amen Corner, they finished their recitation of the Lord’s Prayer. Then, they turned south and chanted the Ave Maria as they passed along, and when that was finished the solemn chanting of the Creed was heard as the procession moved along Creed Lane.

This seems to be a better explanation of the names than that devised by John Stow, who stated that Paternoster was so named "because of stationers, or text-writers, that dwelt there who wrote and sold all sorts of books then in use: A. B. C., with the Pater Noster, Ave, Creed, Grace, etc. There dwelt the turners of heads, and they are called Paternoster makers. At the end of Paternoster Row in Ave Maria Lane, so called upon the like occasion of text-makers and head-makers then dwelling there." These artists were called paternosters, and turned heads for rosaries. One Richard Russell described as a Paternoster was living here in 1549. It seems to us better to accept the first explanation.

This little precinct called Amen Corner is separated from the street by a wall placed by a handsome gateway. The College of Physicians was in the lane before the Great Fire, but it was burned down, and a cannon’s house erected on the site. Within the corner and Amen Court are the dwellings of the canons of St. Paul’s and other officials, wherein the former can write their sermons and live in peace, and not be distracted by the roar of constant traffic in this quiet little oasis.

Spear Points

“The world is long on religion but short on Christianity.”

“A man is not necessarily a Christian merely because he attends church, any more than a wheelbarrow is an automobile because it is kept in a garage.”

It’s impossible to introduce others to Jesus if you do not know Him first, or how He can be found.

“True religion will operate between Sundays.”

“Christianity knows no bargain counter religion; it calls for full submission to Christ.”

“Carve your name on human hearts. They are better than marble.”

“To be nameless in worldly deeds is a mighty poor biography to leave.”—Dr. Isaac Ward.
HOMILETICAL

THE HAPPY MAN

"Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God" (Psalm 146:5).

The Bible has much to say about happiness or joy. It never fails to show where such a condition must be found, and of what it consists. In this Psalm we have both the source and nature of true happiness.

God is the only source of lasting joy. If we hope in things, certain failure is sure to result; for things cannot produce lasting happiness. The same may be said of persons; they cannot give us lasting joys. To have God for our help, and to have hope in the Lord is to possess everlasting happiness. Poverty cannot destroy it, nor men take away. Strange as it may seem, God's joy is in processing us, and our peace is in them. In this relationship is redemption complete.

II. THE NATURE OF HAPPINESS WE FIND IN GOD

1. Because He "Keeps truth forever" (v. 5). God never will break His promises, nor will He fail those who trust in Him. He cannot disappoint us, for "He keepeth truth forever." He will help when we need help. Our hope is secure for it is in the covenant-keeping God of Jacob.

Let this stimulate our faith in times of trouble and fear. God cannot fail us. He will help us. Surely this should make us happy.

2. Because "He executeth judgment for the oppressed" (v. 7). The wicked oppress the righteous. They distress them with their persecutions. They deny them their rights, and slander them in hatred. The devil adds his power to trouble them and afflict them in many ways. But God will execute judgment. He will deliver His people from the power of their foes. He will not condemn them, but will judge them righteously. We are safe while in His hands. For He understands us fully, sympathizes with us in our troubles. This should make us happy.

3. Because "The Lord giveth food to the hungry" (v. 7). Can we be starved while such a promise stands? Have not the saints a perfect right to claim this promise? Can God not fulfill it? Will He fail to do so? If we believe Him in this, then be happy, because our bread is sure. 4:5, 6.

4. Because "The Lord healeth the prisoners." Our happiness is in freedom, the freedom which the Son gives. Liberty from fear, from evil, from men, from the world's ways and fashions, from worry, from death, and from the grave. Can anything hold us prisoners when the Lord heareth us? Then be happy in the liberty which the Lord doth give.

5. Because "The Lord openeth the eyes of the blind." Here true happiness is in being able to see. See what the wicked can never see. We see God, and hope, and heaven, and our eternal home, and life, and eternal life. We see values in afflictions, endurance in distress, power in weakness, help in temptation. Much is seen by those whose eyes have been opened.

6. Because "The Lord rebuadeth them that are bowed down." This is exaltation to a place of honor. Made kings, and priests unto God. Rights and privileges are now ours. Power in prayer, in faith, can we conquer the world.

7. Because "The Lord loveth the righteous." Our happiness is in being loved of God.

JUSTIFICATION

1. AN EVANGELICAL ACT
2. AS TO THE ORIGIN (Rom. 3:24; Heb. 9:12; Matt. 20:28).
3. AS TO THE CAUSE (Rom. 3:25; 26; 1 John 4:10).
4. AS TO THE GROUNDS (Rom. 3:8; Gal. 3:8; Rom. 5:8).
5. THE ESSENTIAL GROUND OF JUSTIFICATION (Christ).
6. He took our low place (2 Cor. 5:21; Acts 13:38, 39).
7. His blood (1 John 1:7; Rom. 5:9; Matt. 36:28).
8. His resurrection (Rom. 4:25).
9. His obedience (Rom. 5:10; Phil. 2:8; 1 Pet. 2:2).
10. His sacrifice (Rom. 5:6; Phil. 2:10).

IV. HE CARES FOR OUR SOUL

1. "I have hid help upon one that is mighty" (Psalm 99:19).
2. "He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life" (John 3:16).
3. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 5:23).

BUDGET BALLAST

By William G. Hislop

1. "The peoples which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up" (Matthew 4:16).

The missionary message is an old message. Notice the sad condition of the people:

1. Sittin in darknes.
2. Sittin in the region and shadow of death.

Heaven religions are not all right. People are sitting hopeless in the dark of death. They are sitting hopeless in the shadow of death. God's Word settles it. Without Jesus Christ they are and shall remain in thick, black, impenetrable darkness.

"Christianity is a missionary religion, because it claims, and justly claims, to be superior to all other religions."

"I know of a world that is sunk in a shame, Where heirs oftaint and tire; But I know of a name, a precious Name, That can set that world on fire; Its sound is sweet, its letters flame; I know of a name, a precious name, 'Tis Jesus."

11. "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men" (Matthew 4:19).

To be a follower of the Christ is to be a fisher of men. Following and fishing is faith and works. If you are a follower you are a fisher.

"No man can follow Christ without following Him to the uttermost part of the earth."

"Never a day near its sunset Never the sea touching tide"
Have you led a soul right? Is there anyone who has found you an amazing treasure in a flower garden? He excused himself by telling the officer, that he was not doing any harm. He was tried, convicted and shot.

"Jesus I sain would find Thy zeal for God in me Thy yearning pity for mankind Thy burning charity."

III. "And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him."

Forskline following Monday This is always the divine order. Everything must bend to soul winning.

"I cared not where or how I lived, or what hardships I went through, so that I could but gain souls for Christ."

"Of all the sacrifices there is none in the sight of the almighty God equal to zeal for souls."

"Dying? Yes, dying in thousands. A hopeless, despairing death: Can we not hear them calling—Pleading with bated breath? Will no one come over and bring us light? Must we perish in darkness rather than sight?"

When Robert Moffatt, the Cheshire martyr, offered himself as a missionary, some of his friends thought and some of them actually said that his brains were turned. His reply was, "Turned? So they are. But they are turned the right way."

"Do you say, as an excuse for remaining here, that, 'There is work enough at home to do?' If you are honest, then you are hard at work. Have you led a soul to Christ during the past year?"

IV. "Ye are the salt of the earth" (Matthew 5:13).

Ye (not someone else) are (not shall be) the salt (preservative of the earth (not only England and America). Salt preserves from decay, corruption, putrefaction. But for the sea with its salt men could not live.

But the saying that "Christians are to keep the world from entire moral corruption they save the world from universal vice and crime." Notice: 1. Christians are the salt (not only preachers, and priests, and bishops, but ye).

2. To keep the world from corruption and death.

3. To save the world from universal death and damnation.

"What could be more wonderful than to be welcomed in the land of cannibals by children smiling?

"Say! are you startled in spirit? Say! does one passion abide? O say! are you spending your heart's blood For sinners for whom Christ died?"

"Behold a hopeless world! See a huge whirlpool. Deathless spirits, rushing with ever increasing velocity in the round of time; powerless to help themselves, without God, without Christ, without hope. Pause until you get a clear vision of this awful sight."

ILLUSTRATIVE MATERIAL Compiled by J. Glenn Gold

Preach It and Weep It was a one-man church, and candidates for the pulpit were being heard. An applicant came and preached on the text, "The wicked shall be turned into hell." The rich man turned thumbs down on him. This preacher was followed by another who by a strange coincidence used the same text. The rich man said, "He'll do, call him." Folks were amazed. "Why, he had the same text as the other minister," they said. "True," replied the rich man, "he preached that the wicked would be turned into hell all right, but he was, oh, so sorry, while the other man was glad of it."—Sunday School Times.

As Ye Forgive Men When John Wesley came to America to serve as a missionary to the American Indians, he sailed on the same vessel with General Oglethorpe, who was coming to take up his duties as Governor of Georgia. One day Mr. Wesley heard a great commotion in the governor's cabin. Stepping up to inquire as to the trouble, he found the governor in a great rage. He said, "Mr. Wesley, you must excuse me; I have met with a provocation too great for man to bear.

You know, the only wine I drink is Cyprus wine; I therefore provided myself with several dozen cases, and this villain (his servant) has drunk the whole of it; but I will be revenged upon him. I have ordered him to be tied hand and foot and placed on the man-of-war, for I never forgive." Then I hope, sir," said Mr. Wesley, looking calmly into his eye. "The governor demanded the reproof that he forgave the servant on the spot and ordered his immediate release.—Selected.

Crucify the Hows and Whys On a Sunday I found myself (wrote Dr. A. J. Gordon) in a country town among strangers. My steps were led for the morning service to a plain, unpretentious little church. I thought to find the peace of God's house; rest in God's Word, cheer for His love, and fellowship with His people; for God is the same always and everywhere. But I did not expect to hear a message to me from a strange pulpit, by a stranger's voice. Yet that is what I did hear. I brought away just one sentence in my mind that I think was a message of God to me. It was in the closing prayer; after a sermon addressed to those waiting and beseeching about eternal things. 'O God help us to get rid of our questionings; help us to crush our whys and hows' (cf. Gal. 5:21; with 6:14). Crucifixion is a shameful and ignominious death. That is what is to be done with doubts and questions—put them to death, without any mercy or favor.—Washington.

The Widow's Mite Dr. A. B. Simpson has retold the story of king Theodosius and the widow Eudoxia, as follows: "There is a very beautiful ancient legend which represents the emperor Theodosius as having built a costly temple in Constantinople, his imperial city, and having embellished on its front in letters of gold, 'This church the emperor Theodosius built for God.' When the day of dedication came, the princes and pretates of the empire were assembled with great pomp, for the opening services. As the emperor was about to enter, he stumbled and anger and that the inscription had been removed and another added in its place: 'This Church the Widow Eudoxia built for God.' The ceremonies were suspended, and the police were sent to search for the presuming woman who had dared to thus insult the emperor. After a long search they found a poor widow outside the city walls in a little cabin, who answered to this name. She was summoned before the emperor and asked what she had ever done to build the temple. She replied with honest words that she had done nothing and claimed no credit; that indeed she was too poor to do anything for the costly edifice which she knew was rising for her Savior, and for which the costly stones had been daily expended upon that glorious edifice and rocky path, until her heart had often longed to do something to help; but she was too poor to do so. She confessed, however, that she had done one little thing; she had often gone to the roadside and pulled the long grass and spread it over rough rocks. And the oxen drew the polished stones, and where she feared they would be jotted and disfigured, and thus she had smoothed the path for the builders, though she could do no more. She had not even dared to come to the opening service, but had rejoiced in her little cabin, and thanked God that the work had been accomplished.

"The emperor was deeply moved by her story, and the old legend adds, he subdued his passion, and modestly assumed that some unseen and supernatural hand had come, unknown to gay and thoughtless widow and had given to the widow the honor that was due to her, rather than to the emperor; because all that he had done had cost him nothing, while hers was perhaps the only true service of sacrifice and love that had ever been expended upon that glorious edifice, and to her God had given the honor which love alone has the right to claim. So still, celestial eyes are watching, and celestial hands are recording for each of us the need of true merit and eternal recompense which love and sacrifice shall ever bring above all the pretensions of self-sufficient human pride.

The Man with the Muck-rake "The Interpreter takes them apart again, and has them first in a room where there was a man that could look no way but downwards, with a muck-rake in his hand. There stood also One over his head, with a celestial crown in his hand, and professed to give him that crown for his muck-rake; but the man did neither look up nor regard, but raked to himself the 'strews,' the small sticks and the dust of the floor. Then said Christians, 'I persuade myself that I know somewhat the meaning of this; for this is a figure of a man of this world; is it not, good sir? 'Thou hast said the right,' said the Interpreter; and his muck-rake doth show his carnal mind. And whereas thou seest him rather give heed to take up straws and sticks, and the dust of the floor, to what he says that calls to life from slumber, the celestial crodon in his hand, it is to show that heaven is but as a table to some, and that things here are counted the only things substantial. Now, whereas it was also showed thee that the man could look no way but downward, it is to let thee know that the things they are with power upon men's minds, quite carry their hearts away from God. Then said Christiana, 'Oh, deliver me from this muck-rake!' 'That prayer,' said the Interpreter, 'has lain by; till it is almost rotten. Give me no riches [Prov. 30:8] is scarce the prayer of one that knows straws and sticks and dust, with most, are the great things now looked after.' —John Bunyan.

Service not a Matter of Choice

At the Student Volunteer Convention held in Nashville, Tennessee, a few years ago, the following incident was told by one of the speakers: A wealthy American living in Paris was persuaded by some of his friends to try to get an appointment from President Roosevelt as a member of the American Embassy in Paris. They said it would help him socially and give him more prestige. So he came to Washington, and when he had gained an audience with the President, he said, 'I think I could serve my country, perhaps, if I should have this appointment in Paris.' But Mr. Roosevelt interrupted him with the words, 'Your young friend, a man desiring to serve his country does not begin by saying where he is going to serve.' —Selected.

Father's Will

An old man was walking to church reading his Testament as he walked. A friend met him and said, 'Good morning,' neighbor.' 'Good morning,' replied the old man; 'I am reading my Father's will as I walk along.' Well, what has He left you?' 'Why, He has bequeathed me a hundredfold more in this life, and, in the world to come, life everlasting!' It happened that his neighbor was in peculiar trouble at the time, and the Christian man's response was a word in season, bringing great comfort to him.

Queen Victoria and the "Messiah"

In one of his addresses at Keswick, Dr. Pier- ron told the following anecdote of queen Vic- toria, and appealed to all present to follow her example in this matter. He said, 'In that same year in which she was crowned there was a se- ries of festivities, closing with the performance of Handel's “Messiah.” I have observed that whenever you perform that, oratorio in Great Britain, and the Hallelujah Chorus comes to be sung, all rise to your feet. Those who had to do with the instruction of the queen concerning court manners, informed her that it would be a great violation of court etiquette to rise, as it was the prerogative of royalty to remain seated when the multitude stood. So when the chorus began and the whole multitude rose, the queen, desirous to testify for Christ, yearned to stand up, too; but she remembered her instructions, and like an obedient young sovereign, retained her seat. As the singers went on: “Hallelujah! Hallelujah! For the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth,” the queen almost had to hold back the sides of her chair to keep from standing up. But when they reached that magnificent passage: “King of kings And Lord of lords,” the queen forgot her court instructions and the manners of royalty. Mocking rising to her feet, she folded her arms over her breast, and bowed her head with the crown of British empire on her brow.

‘Bring forth the royal diadem, And crown Hia Lord of all.” —Selected.

Vacant Temple

'It is said that when Pompey captured Jeru- salem he entered the temple. On reaching the vast curtain that hung across the "holy of holies," into which none but the high priest could enter, and that only on one day of the year, he wondered what the dark recess might contain. He drew the veil aside, but the glory had dis- parted and there was nothing there. How many people today are like that? Temples without a God. All beautiful outside. But when we lift the veil and pass beyond to where the glory should be, there is nothing to be seen. The glory is gone.” —Selected.

Tranquility

Let nothing disturb thee, Nothing frighten thee; All things are passing, God never changeth.

Patient endurance

Attisathed to all things; Who God possesseth

In nothing is wanting;

Alone God sufficeth

THE PRACTICA

A CONCEPTION OF THE NAZARENE PASTOR'S RESPONSIBILITY

By L. A. Redd

PART THREE

The pastor should be zealous about the development of his connections interests —local, district and general.

The demands which are made upon a pastor in this age are such that he cannot be a one groove man. He must, as it were, have enough hands to keep his finger on every pulse of the church. This is especially true of the Sunday school, the W. F. M. S., and the Young People's Society. He must show enough interest in the Sabbath school to be there ahead of time, and always at the service of the Sunday school superintendent. It would not be a bad idea for him to greet people at the door. We do not con- tend that he should teach a class. In fact it is preferable that he do not, but that he should interest himself in every class and activity. He should always have his statistics on his tongue's end. He should always know whether his school is growing, standing still, or on the decline, and act accordingly. He should know whether his offerings are keeping up sufficiently to warrant any advanced program or whether his school is running in the "red." It is merely his business to keep himself informed on these things, but it is surprising how few of our pastors do keep themselves informed about these things. Again he should have an active interest in the progress of his Woman's Missionary Society. It has always been our experience that the women's pro- gram can be guided to such their finances can take up the slack, should there be any, in the missionary portion of the General Budget. It is not necessary for us to try at their meetings, I think they get along better without him. Once in a while a word of address to them will inspire them to even greater effort. He should be sufficiently respected by his women so that they will inquire and seek his advice relative to their missionary plans. If a pastor is wise, he will push the Prayer and Fasting League. This is a great spiritual and financial blessing to the church. All of the people praying and fasting at least once a week, is bound to reflect in the spiritual life of the congregation. And then the financial aspect is not to be slighted. So far this year, after six months, the Prayer and Fasting League of First church, Kansas City has brought in in excess of five hundred dollars. This means we have 139 people praying and fasting once a week and giving a special offer- ing for missions. If a pastor wants to take ex- ception to the plan because of some extraneous excuse, he is liable to estrange his women from his program and also rob his people of a great blessing in their spiritual life.

There there are the young people. A pastor should be at his young people's society and be a booster. He should speak once in a while. We follow the practice of speaking whenever a fifth Sunday occurs in the month. Our active part- icipants should be limited among the young people, for they like to conduct their own service. They are always open to advice and very susceptible to it, if it is given wisely. A pastor's influence with his young people should not be limited to the Sabbath activities. The time has come in the history of church life, when, slow as we are to receive it, the activities of the young people should be guided to the extent of supervision of just about all their week day life as well as Sunday life. This is increasingly so in the cities where so many things will detract from their at- tention on church services and work. We do not know to just what extent we can carry out such a program, but this I do know, that when I neglect my young people, all during the week, the first thing I know, some other pastor has their interest and confidence, or their footsteps are guided in another direction, sometimes de- nominationally but more frequently morally. It has been the policy with many of our pastors to keep telling the young people what they couldn't do and yet not tell them what they could do. They have very outside interest, with the result that we have lost many good, live young people because of the pastor's folly. The pastor should, to a degree, enter into their social life. These little intimate contacts, some times count more with individuals than the sermons one preaches. We make it a point to eat lunch with some layman of our church each Monday noon. This contact with our men helps us in the solution of the problems of our church, for oftentimes their viewpoint is even more vital than ours. It also gives us a close up view of their spiritual life and their religious thinking, which in turn assists us to know what type of messages the congregation needs and appreciates. We should be the servants of our people. In order to serve them properly, we must know them. They should not feel that we must move to every whim they might have, or run a hasty bus to carry them all over town, or as the apostles objected "serve tables" but we should in a manner commensurate with our position, keep our contacts in shape, and our relations wholesome.

Then there are the district interests which every pastor must face. These are the hardest interests to properly care for. They are the interests between the local and the general. It is easy for one to appreciate the local demands, and also demands in which one is interested, but when we look from the local to the general we frequently look over as well as over look the district interests. Yet in the economy of our polity the district is an indispensable unit in the work which we are endeavoring to do. Sometimes district interests exist only in name.

This makes the District Superintendent, mostly a home missionary, with very little if any support, but when you consider that the small church owes its very existence to the district, it should make an honest effort to support the district interests, which in turn foster a new endeavor.

The fact of the case is, in relation to the general church, the district is the goose that lays the golden egg, and it is the pastor's responsibility to prosecute its interests.

Then there are a few considerations relative to our general work. We have spoken of the need of reaching the outside community in our missionary work, but there are one or two others which should demand our attention. No ecclesiastical organization such as a denomination can exist, unless it supports three things, e. g., foreign missions, church schools and denominational literature. One of any one of these three and we might as well write "and finish" to our history. In supporting foreign missions we are only keeping the command of the Lord to take the gospel to every creature; in supporting our schools we are preparing men and women to do this task after we have left the world. In engaging the services of these preachers in Methodists and Baptist or any other denominational schools. Somehow or other they just do not seem to return to us Nazarenes. No doubt our educational policy needs much attention, revision and pruning, especially the latter for all we need are three schools or four at the most, but we must have schools, so let us get down to business and support them properly.

Then there is the third consideration, namely, a church literature. This is the greatest way, next to preaching, of spreading the gospel to every creature. We must have a church paper and Bible school literature. The teachings of other people are never going to assist us in doing the task God has called us to do. Our literature should have a prominent place in every Nazarene home. So many new papers have been piled up on the Christian Witness, Pentecostal Herald, God's Revivalist, etc., which are very fine papers, but it is the pastor's responsibility to see to it that before any others find entrance into Nazarene homes, the Herald of Holiness comes first. Live of die, sink or swim, our paper or perish; we must boost this great paper until it is a religious force in the religious life of the United States. We must boost the Publishing House and not allow it to be emasculated by our de- linquency. Let everybody say, Amen.

II. FACTS THE MATERIALS OF REVIVAL PREACHING

By Rev. James H. Caughey

Compiled by Dr. H. Orton Wiley

I N PREACHING, facts are my materials, and not theories. Not that I am immune of the benefit of theories; they are very good in their place, nor do I neglect them. They may be to a discourse what a foundation is to a building. A foundation answers no purpose; unless an edifice be raised upon it; but we want more than the foundation in the construction of a, seemingly specimen of correct architecture. A sermon, all theory, is neither pleasing, profitable, nor effectual. I consider a theorem, of course, in the sense of a religious truth laid down as a principle, and treated in a speculative manner, without any illustration, wherever. Our Lord never neglected first principles, but he never speculated upon them. He seldom advanced a theological principle in the absence of a historical fact; nor the simplest moral truth, without an illustration of some kind, real or supposed.

A few years ago, I was invited by a surgeon to hear a medical lecture in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the city of New York. The platform was honored by the presence of several talented physicians. We had been seated but a few minutes when an active little man, aged about fifty, appeared on the platform, and facts cheered by the students. He announced his subject immediately: "The influence of the nerves upon the mind, and of the mind upon the nerves." Brisk, lively, and eloquent, he had our attention in a moment, nor did he lose it during the entire lecture. Principles were laid down at once; but, instead of supporting theories by theorizing and discussing them in the dry technicalities peculiar to the medical science, as I expected, he came forward with facts, undeniable facts, drawn from his experience and the observation of others. Real life and history were called upon for contribution, without apology. Every eye was fixed upon the animated speaker; every mind was interested. Principles, to some, might have been unintelligible, to others questionable, but his facts were invariable.

Here received a lesson on preaching which I trust will never be forgotten. Many of our hearers understand our theological terms very well; and though they require no illustration to deepen their convictions of the truths of our holy religion, yet facts may make them feel, and there is enjoyment in feeling when the heart is rightly tuned by the grace of God. To many of our hearers, however, theological technicalities may be quite unintelligible and are but partially understood, even when we have done our best at defining while to others, after all our effort, they may be questionable or uninteresting. The effects of mere statements of truth and explication of terms, upon the minds of both classes, are generally vague and superficial and are easily obliterated; as letters drawn upon the sand and washed away by the coming tide. But they will understand facts, and remember them, too, nor will they readily fade away from the mind. Like a stone in the sand, a fact may imbed itself in the mind, and stamp upon it an indelible impression of the truth of that which has been thus illustrated. A judicious writer has well observed, "The most important truths, as we are now constituted, make but a very slight impression on the mind unless they enter first like a picture into the imagination, and from thence are stamped upon the memory." "May put the theme," says another, "as well be hearkening to a mathematician demonstrating Euclid's Elements, as to a preacher only proving a point in Christianity?"

Exceptions to this statement may occur to your minds. "Proving a point in Christianity," may have its effect; indeed, I think it is quite necessary; for we need line upon line, and precept upon precept. As those who have learned the Greek grammar, and have studied the language well, find, on negating it for a time, an incapacity in translating, and an equal difficulty in recalling first principles to grapple with the root and its branches; so it is necessary to have our memory refreshed again and again with the true meaning of every point in Christianity, the above observer says, "only proving a point." Now the minister of Jesus whose heart is inflamed by one desire and aim will not content himself with having convinced the hearer of the truth of any one point of Christianity; but he will grapple with the conscience, and his insidious mind will range through heaven and earth for facts and illustrations; nor will he allow the sinner to get away till he is forced, if possible, to 'feel that he has need of everything Jesus Christ hath purchased for him by his most precious blood.

PSYCHOLOGY FOR THE MINISTER.

By Basil W. Miller

Educational Psychology for the Minister

A GREATER emphasis is being placed upon the educational work of the minister today than in any previous age of the history of preaching. We have discovered that Christian character is developed when religious education supplements the preaching work of the ministry. Every minister has two outstanding tasks, the teaching of God's Word, and the teaching of the way. He thus becomes a preacher and a teacher. He is a teaching preacher, and a preaching teacher.

THE TEACHING-PREACHER

Every successful minister is a teacher. His sermons must become instructive. They must carry such a body of truth to be taught as will satisfy the intellectual needs of the congregation. The subject matter must be interesting. Through preaching is the highest possible moral and spiritual truth, the Bible. From this alone the minister teaches history, biography, character studies, moral and civic duties, ethics, or the duties of man to man, as well as religion, the duties of man to God. Then there is that material not of the Bible, such as religious biographies, the history of the Church, ethical relationships, etc.
He will find his illustrations in all the fields of human endeavor, history, current events, scicence, education, etc. The first class of teaching materials is called biblical, and the second, extra-biblical. We thus see how great the field of curriculum material is that the minister has to draw from.

THE LEADER OF ORGANIZED CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

In the local church the minister is not only a preaching teacher, but he is also the leader of all organized projects of Christian education. The teaching work of the church will be successful only as the minister is able to lead, to inspire his workers with a proper vision of Christian education and its fruits of character formation. Under this heading come the church school, the Sunday school, or Bible school as it may be termed, the Young People's Societies, Junior Societies, the educational work of all other auxiliary movements, such as missionary societies, etc. In each of these the minister must ded the educational pace. If the church school is successful, the minister must set a vision of a teaching, character-forming school. The same is true of missionary societies, junior meetings, etc. In all of these there is a worship period and a study or devotional period. Due attention must be given to the study period, and this can be done successfully if the minister proves a true educator as well as a preacher.
Let us then turn our attention to those psychological principles which make education worth while.

WHAT IS LEARNING?

Learning consists of making some kind of changes in one's conduct. For the minister the task of teaching has the goal of forming such dual changes as are desirable from moral and spiritual ends. It is not the function of the minister to teach mathematics or science, but his work is found in the teaching of morals, and of the content of Christianity. Then the learning which he tries to produce must be in terms of character changes of religious value.

Learning means the formation of new bonds and new pathways in the mind. The mental structure must be changed for every outward habit or act which the learner builds or does.
These connections come about through the continual use of the mental-mechanism. For the minister to be a teacher he must realize that the process is one of constant repetition of the work of instruction.

Learning likewise means mental activity. The minister must be able to so inspire those whose leader he is that they will arouse emotions, crete desires among the pupils in the church school, and all others in the teaching work of the church to use their minds in learning, in thinking upon the matters of instruction.

Christian learning also consists in the formation of clear ideas about religious truth, correct dogma, the ethics of Christian living, which will function in everyday life. Ideas or mental images have the power of working themselves out-in motor expression. Clearcut mental images of duty and God, ethics and life, formed under the tutorage of the church, will find expression in character changes.
The idea of repetition in the production of these mental images of the church. There should be a definable end in building systems of definite mental images which shall function along religious and character lines, is fundamental. Learning cannot be achieved without a constant repetition of drills, moral work, the use of the mind.

It is the duty of the minister in the church teaching activities to present definable mental pictures or images to be achieved, character goals to be wrought out in life. The idea of salvation must become clearer in outline, so that the mental images of which it consists will be impressed upon the mind of the learner.
Character changes, which are desired to be worked out in the lives of the learners, must be driven home by the power of a definite knowledge of the ends in view, and by continual repetition of the idea, or direct classroom instruction. This will to learn, or this confidence in success, is an attitude to be developed, which inspires the learner to greater effort and concentration.
Here are some devices which have been worked out by which this mental desire or attitude can be developed:

1. Show by actual facts that each learner achieves more when he desires to study, to learn.

For instance, if the message is on faith, the minister must define it, show what it can accomplish, create a desire on the part of the learners, or listeners, to practice the art of believing, and arouse an emotional intensity which will act as the "driving urge" to carry into character action the principle of faith. If the teaching is that of a study hour for missions, some aim, some idea should be held in mind as the desired outcome of the period of instruction.
If mere knowledge is the goal, then the teaching must present the material, say on China, or child needs, or medical missions, so that those being taught can understand it, so vividly that they can form mental pictures of the conditions.
Usually in all missionary instruction the outstanding aim is to teach the people of the needs and dire circumstances of fideous and foreign countries, that we will be led to pray, to give and to go.

THE WILL TO LEARN

The greatest problem among all preachers, and this includes the teaching-preacher, is the development of the will to learn. It has been esblished beyond a question that learning takes place more rapidly when there is a "will to learn," the prime mover; and it is one of the most fruitful experiments on two groups of people, the following results were discovered: (1) Those with the will to make improvement in a given amount of practice time than the others; (2) Those with this stimulus to learn, when it was removed,
suddenly decreased in the rate of learning;
(3) The group without the stimulus to learn, when this was supplied, began at once to improve and to learn rapidly; (4) Those who had the will to learn showed fewer errors or mistakes than the others.

This shows that interest in improvement, or this will to know or to learn, is a direct force in learning. Hence it is the duty of the teaching-preacher to arouse the will to learn, and a confidence in success, among those he instructs, whether in the peculiar field of his work, or direct classroom instruction. This will to learn, or this confidence in success, is an attitude to be developed, which inspires the learner to greater effort and concentration.
Here are some devices which have been worked out by which this mental desire or attitude can be developed:

1. Show by actual facts that each learner achieves more when he desires to study, to
learn.
certain scales for the rating of teaching ability.

4. Another method by which this will is aroused is by showing the student that he has not reached the limit of his improvement.

5. A fifth method to achieve this goal is to point out to the student that others have progressed beyond the measure attained by himself. This type of activity is called practice and is important. By it, the student learns that his mind-set is useful, as it is necessary for the mind to create such an atmosphere in the activities of the church where instruction is given that the learner will be ready to undertake the tasks at hand.

ECONOMY IN LEARNING

There are certain principles, which, if followed, will facilitate learning. These laws are known as those of economical learning.

1. The first of these is: there must be attention, concentration, and zeal in all learning. Attention is hasty to all learning. It has been said that "it is an intense effort which educates." Attention makes the learner tense, since he shuts out all distractions. This means that it is necessary for the mind to create such an atmosphere in the activities of the church where instruction is given that the learner will be ready to undertake the tasks at hand.

2. The second is: there must be economy of mind-set. The student must be able to do the work with the least amount of distraction, or so fit his work to them; through concentration that they will not take his mind off its work. Where distractions take the mind off its object then learning ceases or is delayed. This problem of distractions is most acute in most church-schools, where several classes must meet in one large room. There is noise, the rattle of chairs, the giggles of other pupils, the loud talking of teachers, etc., to be fought against. The preacher-teacher will do all in his power to eliminate such distractions. First, if possible separate rooms, or rooms set off by curtains, will be provided for each class. Where this is impossible, such order and quietness will be maintained in the large room that distractions are as few as possible. If the child learns about the subject, such mental images of duty and salvation as will work out in his life, he must be led to concentrate on such. To do so, attention must be aroused through the elimination of distractions.

3. The significance of the task must be understood. No learning takes place unless the child is led to see that the studying and application are worth while. This can be brought about when a child finds that the lesson is a problem in which he is interested, or something related to his life.

4. There must be an absence of worry and other emotional excitement. Fussing in the class, distractions which lead to the necessity of physical communion, continual nagging on the part of the teacher, and other methods to destroy all bent to learning. They create a negative mind-set, a desire not to learn, and immediately the class is out of the control of the instructor.

5. Economical learning is hastened by the elimination of all fatigue producing conditions. Every distraction on the same thing wears on the mind. The sermon can lack variety, climactic appeal: Monotony of tone-timber, loudness, emotional appeals wrought into the voice, pitch, etc., soon fatigue an audience, and learning ceases.

The effects of ventilation upon audiences are well known. It has been found by experiment that the temperature of around 80 to 85 degrees F., with no circulation of air, or a little very at all, is the most agreeable "climate" in which to try to think or to work. This, it is to be remarred, is the average temperature of the average auditorium in which the average preacher-teacher tries to work! Where there is an incentive to attend the matters at hand, the audience has been found able to do so. But it requires all that is in the minister or teacher to arouse this incentive. Where the matters are free from incentive then nothing is learned. The best temperature, and the least fatigue is around 68 degrees F.

When the mind tires variety will rest it. The same reading, a monotone, a dull talk in the classroom, or even the routine, is the change of the Bible, the doing away with the run of "things as usual," and an interest will be taken of the work. This is true of arousing the interest, and enthusiasm of an audience. Vary the appeal—change the tone—play upon a different note in the usual. The "usual program" and interest, through the disappearance of mental fatigue, will be increased.
every emotional prompting, you may have to practice the act you desire to make into a habit. Practice, and again practice, says the great psychologist James.

Law VIII. Keep the practice alive by a little gratuitous exercise every day. Don’t practice the habit only when you are required to—find occasional when you can practice.

Law IX. Motivate every new habit with some intense desire for its formation. We must have some strong motive for the building of each specific habit.

Law X. The learner must have a very clear idea of what he is to do, and exactly how to do it, to facilitate habit building. In other words, he must localize his attention upon the specific details of the habit.

ECONOMY IN STUDYING:

In the wild race of the present day time is a great factor. In learning, we should follow the laws of economy in learning, and those of studying. These rules have been variously worked out, and can be carefully followed by any student, and the studying teacher can well assist those under him by familiarizing them with the laws. They are:

1. Keep in good physical trim to study well.
2. Keep the external conditions of light, temperature, ventilation, etc., favorable.
3. Have a place and time-study habit. Set definite times and places for study.
4. Begin all work promptly with a mind-set to study.
5. Work with the intent of learning and remembering for a long period of time.
6. Get rid of the idea that you are working for the teacher, or for anyone else. This is a private matter for personal benefit.
7. Have a clear-cut aim in view of what you want to achieve in studying.
8. Before you begin any advance study, rapidly review what was learned at the last study period.
9. Study and learn all important matters beyond the point necessary for immediate recall. Overlearn them.
10. Make the period of study long enough to utilize the time necessary for “arming up,” but not too long to weary you.
11. Distribute your period of drill or repetition over more than one period. It is better to drill 20 minutes a day for 10 days than to spend the entire 150 minutes at one time learning the piece.

12. When the mind is weary, and you go on to a new assignment or new material, pause long enough to allow the mind to “rest.”
13. When tired after intense application, arise, breathe deeply, and take a little exercise, and the mind will be rested for the new task.
14. Mark your books when necessary, and write out the main points on margins for review purposes.
15. Outline all complex and difficult material and memorize the outline.

16. Use all knowledge gained in study as soon as is possible, and continue this use, and review of all learned.
17. To memorize a poem, or selection, learn it by the whole and not by a part at a time.
18. Learn to take notes in reading, and from lectures and sermons.
19. Make out a study program and follow it carefully.
20. Read with a question in your mind. Ask yourself the question, What am I looking for? What is the meaning of the author?

How to Improve Your Memory

A very practical question faced by the teaching-teacher is, How can I improve my memory? It is necessary for the minister, to have a most excellent memory. This frees him from the details of notes and written sermons, and makes it possible for him to carry in his memory the carefully outlined and written message, and to deliver it without the bondage of notes or reading. Then in teaching he must be able to recall the facts which he wishes to use. He will follow these principles he will be able to train or improve his memory.

1. Understand thoroughly the idea of what you wish to remember. A, jumble of words, and a mass of details which are not understood will slip from the memory.
2. Go over the material which you wish to remember time and time again, giving attention to the form of the outline, the detailed arrangement of the paragraphs, and the order of the points.
3. While reading that which you wish to remember be very attentive to it. Never repeat this material mechanically, but give attention to the meaning every time you go over it.
4. Learn and read with the desire and intent of recalling that which you study. Fix the attention upon it so that when you desire to do so you will be able to bring it into the focus of consciousness.

5. Frequently during the period of routine and study, stop and recall what you have read. When you have finished a chapter or a paragraph, recall it, before going to another one. Do the same at the end of each chapter, and likewise when the book is finished.
6. Have confidence in your memory and trust it in difficult situations. Memorize the outline of your sermon or address, or material for discussion, and then trust your memory by leaving the notes at home.
7. Overlearn all that is absolutely necessary for you to recall. Materials overlearned stay with us longer than any other.
8. When preparing to use this memory material, re-simply it through these items carefully:
   (1) Review the main points carefully by having a clear-cut skeleton of the outline.
   (2) Never cram at the last minute. Take sufficient time earlier in the course of the day or week, and go over this outline, and do not depend upon the last minute preparation. Your mind is thus clogged and does not function properly.
9. When under the stress of having to use the memory in preaching, delivering an address or teaching a class:
   (1) Be self-confident, cool, because if you are not yourself to become frustrated or nervous. Absolutely trust your memory.
   (2) If you cannot remember the next point in the outline, try to fit something into the moment, and give the memory a chance to recall the forgotten point. If it does not come at all, go on with whatever points come to mind as though nothing had occurred. Do not permit yourself to say, "I forget what comes next." Act as though you were confidently in charge of the mechanism of your memory and muscle.

10. Finally avoid all distractions when using the memory in an address or sermon. One distraction, if allowed to interfere with memory, will wreck the entire program of recall. Think clearly and frankly of the outcome of success or failure in the present undertaking, and go on.

Prayer Answered

The time may be delayed, the manner may be unexpected, but the answer is sure to come. Not a tear of sacred sorrow, not a breath of holy desire poured out in prayer to God, ever will be lost; but in God’s own good time and way, it will be waived back again in clouds of mercy and fall in showers of blessing on you and those for whom you pray.
other guests. No doubt as the people slipped off their sandals, the slave would bring a basin of water and wash their feet, and then after the great meal, would receive a sum of money. I suspect Jesus was not dressed as nicely as the other guests. At any rate, the intimation is that Simon had eaten to show due courtesy to Him. The Master did not turn and leave the upstairs宾客; but the fact that He mentioned Simon, would receive a sum of money, shows that He felt the slight, intended or otherwise.

Jesus certainly ministered bounteously to the Jewish nation, and the least Simon could 'have done would have been to show some gratitude for His marvelous service, but also I like too many, his thoughtlessness caused him to forget to show gratitude where it should have been shown. Had Jesus resented it and shown the hurt, that would have been human, but His beautiful spirit is, to my mind, an indication of His deity.

Rev. J. Wilbor Chapman tells of a man who saved the lives of, I think, 17 people from Lake Michigan near Evanston. This man nearly forfeited his life in rescuing these people, and if I remember correctly, was ill for some time after the experience. He recovered, however, and was on the public platform one night with Mr. Chapman, when the great exchange of an occasion introduced him. He asked him what was the outstanding thing in that experience that fastened itself upon his mind, and the man said that the outstanding feature that he never forgot was that out of the 17 people whom God enabled him to rescue, not one ever even said, “Thank you.”

I suppose there is no more severe temptation that comes to the minister of Jesus Christ than to repay the man who is guilty of ingratitude in his own coin and yet I am sure there is no method that will do us more good, or better discipline us, than refusing to be affected by it, and, with the help of God, manifest a beautiful spirit under such circumstances. There comes to my mind an incident in our own experience as pastors of a church on our district was asked to forego his inheritance because he was found to be using tobacco. It was not a hear-say case, but the evidence was so plain that he never offered a protest but handed over his credentials to the secretary of the district one night while we were preaching on “Peter the Backslider” he presented himself at an altar of prayer, and in real penitence, gave himself anew to Jesus Christ. He was out of work; he was without God; he was discouraged, but that night he fully made the grade and touched the hem of His garment once more. We received him into the fold. We went to the assembly, appeared before the Committee on Orders and Relations, pleaded his case, and got his credentials restored to him. Later on we lent him some money, of which he repaid part and which I am reasonably sure he forgot and thought it was given to him without work—we got him a job. Later on he was taken sick and had to have an operation. We went to the firm for whom he worked, and got them to give him enough money to pay for the operation. We consulted the physician, and got him to take the case at a figure which he could meet. The operation was performed, his health was restored, he forgot the doctor’s bill, we paid the doctor $45.00, $30.00 of which was personally given, and the doctor passed on to his reward. Some time later he left the church, taking his letter, and again went on the rocks. Later on, came back, acknowledged his shortcomings, said he was sorry for his attitude, and we received him into the church, and the following year he voted against us. Some of my friends were very discouraged, and said there was no use, and they wanted to pay him back by refusing to give him work that they had promised. Here was my opportunity. We needed some work done in our own home. He was idle. He is a good family man. We not only gave him the job, but tried to make the folks see how wrong it would be to take such an attitude. At least it would be contrary to the spirit of Jesus, in a similar experience. Of course some said we were foolish, but with the light we have we would do the same thing over again, and I am telling you now that the good feeling in our own heart, that we were enabled to do this service, repaid us one thousandfold. Not the easy thing, but the right thing, should be the actuating motive.

wicked servant, I forgive thee all that debt because thou wert a friend; shouldst thou not also have had compassion on thy fellow servant, even as I had had compassion on thee? And he said, Master, all they that have borrowed from me, I gave for thee without payment. The Lord said, What servant is this, which having a certain sum of money, gave no account of the same; nor did he deal foolishly. Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to shine on the good and on the bad, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unrighteous. — Matt. 5:43-45

II. CHRISTIAN PERFECTION

I am sure this attitude is right, for Jesus Christ, in bygone days, had it to do with the perfection of His perfection. I believe it is the one thing His plunks, when He said, “Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to shine on the good and on the bad, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unrighteous.”

I am not saying that you are doing perfectly. Perhaps I do not need to say that He is not talking about absolute perfection, nor Adamic perfection, nor angelic perfection, nor resurrection perfection, but the context clearly shows that He has reference to God’s kind of love, (Christian perfection).

The law said, “Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.” The command, “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.”

Thou shalt love thy neighbour and hate-thine enemies,” but Jesus said, “Love your enemies, bless them that curse ye, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.”

Nor only is it the direct command, but all through the Old Testament are types and shadows and symbols, emphasizing the fact that God’s plan for humanity was to perfect them in love. The doctrine of the second blessing, properly so called, as revealed in the Bible is the key to the Scriptures, for I have read book after book on symbolism, and the mystery is never solved. Away back, years ago, I questioned the Pauline authorship of the book of Hebrews, first because of the fact that it does not bear his name. You preachers will remember that someone had written a letter purporting to come from Paul, evidently forcing his name to it, and sending it to the church at Thessalonica, telling them that the Lord had already come, and they had been left behind, and in the first, second, and third verses of the second chapter of 2 Thessalonians, Paul says, “Now we beseech you, brethren...”

I believe that Paul begins his letter by signing his name, and closes it the same way. It is reasonably certain that then every epistle he wrote afterward would have his signature in order that his enemies might not successfully disturb the churches.

A careful reader of Paul’s epistles, will observe that these faults are mentioned always at the beginning of his letters, frequently, when the condemnation of the church, the father of the prophets, both in these last days, spoken unto us by his Son. It appears to be the work of some person well versed in Old Testament scripture, who, having received the baptism with the Holy Ghost, stands amazed at the teaching of the books of Exodus and Leviticus as they open up to him their meaning.

Dean Alford suggests, Apollo as the author of the book, and many other authorities deny the Pauline authorship, but give no suggestion as to who the author might be. I am very certain that any person reading the book of Hebrews with this in mind, in mind, will be led to believe that someone familiar with Old Testament scriptures is blessed and thrilled with the doctrine of holiness, or Christian perfection, as taught by type and symbol in Exodus and Leviticus. The theme of Hebrews seems to be Christian perfection and entire sanctification, at the second work of grace.

To illustrate, take the third chapter, beginning at the seventh verse. Here is an exhorta-

The Nazarene. Passions.

I recently preached a couple of nights for a young pastor and his wife on our district. The church had some people in its membership who seemed to foolishly oppose the first appearance of the pastor and his wife. They seemed to be tinctured with the teaching of an old man I met in my early ministry, who used to emphasize the fact that Jesus never had but one suit of clothes, and never wore a white shirt. I do not know how he knew that. Perhaps it was only to excuse his own severely plain garb. I took an occasion, the second night I was in this pulpit, to tell the people how fortunate they were to have such a pastor, and how fortunate he was to be blessed with such a wife. Their home was scrupulously clean. The furnishings were not lavish, but tastefully arranged, and anyone could see that the hand of a master had arranged the sparsely furnished parsonage to the best advantage. The preacher could come to their home without being favorably impressed with the Nazarenes, and instead of criticism he should have had the highest commendation for the free advertising he was giving the Nazarenes in that town.

It is not without reason, I think, that the Nazarenes are called the "frugal" or "meager" Nazarenes. They are not all types and symbols of the Old Testament point to Him as the One Who can make us perfect in love in this life.

The devil is fighting hard against us. The world is no friend to grace. We have enough foes to fight without giving the enemies of holiness cause to rejoice. But because of the natural heart prejudice against the doctrine 'we preach we have all the more need to give heed to some of these things that arouse apophtasis and prejudice.

Helped by Good Books

I recently read with great profit Bud Robinson's "Hospital Experience." It is in the form of a little booklet with Bud Robinson's picture on the outside cover, and can be obtained from the Nazarene Publishing House for the small sum of 15c. I suppose I have read the book only a few times and yet I find it a thrilling read. I suppose I have read the book only a few times and yet I find it a thrilling read. RAISING CHURCH FINANCE

SEVERAL requests have been made for suggestions along the lines of raising church finance. Three such suggestions are gathered from observation and experience.

The greatest task before the board of stewards, the finance committee, or pastor, depending upon who is responsible for the raising of these funds, is to make each member feel his responsibility for the work of the church. There are numerous appeals which can be made to accomplish this; the personal benefits he receives through the working of the church, the benefits his family receives, the need of such a church in the community, if the member needs such personal appeals; or, the debt each Christian owes to Christ for the propagation of the gospel message in the world, that one is the steward of his possessions and he is obligated to God who is the supreme owner of all things to give back to Him as God has prospered him. Other appeals might be presented as demanded by the person with whom one is dealing.

There is a danger which must be avoided in making these appeals. Each member must be made to feel his responsibility without making it a burden to him. This danger is avoided by the use of the biblical method of the paying of tithes. It is in all too often wrong method of approach to make definite appointments to the individual members, demanding that each pay an equal amount to the different financial obligations of the church. If the committee is not careful the stressing of money will bring some good people—people who will be a spiritual blessing to the church, or those who have great need of the benefits of membership in the church. In the place where they will feel and sometimes will say, “I cannot afford to belong to the church.”

People are usually sensitive along financial lines and leaders must be careful not to command some member who gives large sums as his ability will permit, and to forget the member whose giving is not so conspicuous but yet when measured according to his ability has given more. No doubt it is wise never to make public commendation of people who have given only what may reasonably be expected of them. Reserve your public commendations for cases of unusual merit. However, this applies only to the commendation of individuals. We should publicly commend our entire congregations for the manner in which they give when occasion may be found for such. Congregations always like to be commanded for what they do, and usually the individual will appropriate to himself as much of the credit as he thinks he deserves.

The most wholesome method for raising finances is to keep it from having too much of a prominent place in the public services, this may be done by mailing every member canvass. The board of stewards may be organized so that each steward will be responsible for the solicitation of a certain number of the membership. If your membership is so large that the stewards cannot successfully function, enlist others to assist them in making such a canvass. Each member should be solicited or interviewed. Get him to make a pledge of some amount, perhaps to pay his tithe into the church. Emphasize that the entire work of the church is represented in the budget presented to him, that he is supporting not only the local work, pastor’s salary, etc., but also the general and district, and sending missions, etc. The stewards should keep the list of members whom they interview and when a member becomes slack in his contributions to interview him. In reality the steward who will take his task seriously may be of untold benefit to the church and to the individual members. He can be a definite help to the spiritually dilatory member as well as looking after the finances of the church. He might well serve in somewhat the same capacity as the old class leaders of John Wesley’s time.

Many of our most successful pastors do not use only one method of working their finances. Some of them feel it is wise at times to separate the foreign mission share of the General Budget and make a special effort to raise this. Make sure however that all money definitely raised for foreign missions is sent to headquarters for that purpose and then bring up the remaining portion of your General Budget for the other items represented therein. Others use the various departments of the church for raising certain parts of the church finances. Often the first Sunday of each month is employed in the Sunday school to raise money for missions, for building funds, or for the other special needs. The W. F. M. S. is always a ready assistance in the raising of foreign missionary funds. The N. V. S. P. should be urged to pay their quota of equipment to one annual canvass. These are all temporary methods and should not be considered as being a permanent part of your financial program. Regular, consistent giving, the paying of the tithe should be considered as the only permanent method to be used by the church. All others are only for special efforts or to meet certain emergencies. No doubt in three times of financial depression the pastor will need to employ as many different methods as possible in order that he raise his finances.

NEW LIFE FOR THE PRAYERMEETING

The midweek prayermeeting should be a service where the members or attendants are given opportunity to participate and it should be conducted in a very simple manner. It is particularly a time for the preacher to deliver a regularly organized sermon, but nevertheless he should give considerable time and attention to the planning and preparation for this important midweek service. More prayermeetings are not interesting and helpful, perhaps, from the cause of insufficient preparation than for any other reason. Too often it is considered of very little consequence and the leader depends too much on the “inspiration of the moment” for the suggestion of the theme to be presented, or for the type of service to be conducted.

Often the way of least resistance is followed and the pastor turns the leadership of this very important service into the hands of inexperienced lay members, some of which have yet hobbies to ride or special theories to propagate. A pastor usually gets himself into difficulty when he turns the entire leadership of this service into the hands of lay people. If he is to be impartial, he must use his entire membership, particularly those who habitually attend prayermeeting. Many of these people are not capable of leading such a meeting. Not many, if any, prayermeetings are successfully conducted along this line.

The most successful prayermeetings we have known have been those where the pastor has carefully planned a program, and in which he has had the needs of the people in mind, and when the people have been given numerous opportunities to give expression to spiritual experiences and to suggest thoughts upon the theme presented in the meeting. The pastor keeps the leadership of the service, but wisely plans for the participation of the lay members.

One of the most successful ways to conduct such a prayer meeting is by using the Bible, reading method. By this method the pastor studies a theme and gathers from different portions of scripture the phases of this theme to be emphasized. He studies the theme well, not only the particular verse or portion of scripture to be read well in his thinking, but also its relation to the context and particularly its relation to the theme under discussion. The different scripture references are given out to those attending to be read. This encourages the people to bring their Bibles to the service. Sometimes it may be wise to select certain people to take these references, perhaps giving them some time in advance to prepare a short talk on the reference to be read. At other times it is advisable to suggest these references from the platform and have the members of the congregation take these references as they are given out. Encourage the people reading the reference to give a short explanation in keeping with the theme under discussion, or to relate some personal experience which illustrates the theme. In this manner the people attending are given opportunity to express themselves and to participate in the service, in addition to the privilege of leading in prayer or giving personal testimony.

We offer a few suggestions for source material for the preparation of Bible readings. These books may be purchased from our own Nazarene Publishing House.

FOUR CURSES OF AMERICA

America is peculiarly blessed, and peculiarly dangerous. Our pulpits have been a key to a key statement, just before his evangelistic campaign in Boston. He said, "The curses of America to-day are Modernism, Materialism, Humanism, and Communism. They absorb everything but the truth. They deny everything but falsehood. They are tunnelling under our faith and homes and churches and government. A leg of powder in one hand, and a fuse and box of matches in the other, they are teaching our boys and girls in most of our schools and colleges that you have no mind. You have no soul. You are a piece of animal machinery, and you respond to the stimuli. In other words, there is no God. There is no devil. There is no heaven. There is no hell. There is no right. There is no wrong. There is nothing but you, and you are nothing but an animal descended from a monkey or a porilla. What you want you have a right to have. Today the individual opinion is the seat of authority. I brand that as mankilling philosophy as anarchic, pure and simple." America can be saved from these four and all other curses by the old and only and evernew cure, the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Sunday School Times.

HOW TO FAIL

The following rules for preaching so as to convert nobody were given by Charles G. Finney. Do they not hold good in our day as in his?

1. Let your supreme motive be popularity rather than salvation.
2. Study to please your congregation and to make a reputation, rather than to please God.
3. Take up popular, passing and sensational themes to draw the crowd, and avoid the essential doctrines of salvation.
4. Denounce sin in the abstract, but pass lightly over sins that prevail in your congregation.
5. If asked, "Is it wrong to dance, play cards and attend the theater?" answer very pleasantly, "Oh, that is a matter for private judgment. It is not for me to say you shall or shall not."
6. Preach on the loveliness of virtue and the glory of heaven, but not on the sinfulness of sin and the terrors of hell.
7. Reprove the sins of the absent, but make those who are present pleased with themselves, so that they will enjoy the sermon and not go away with their feelings hurt.
8. Make the impression on worldly church members that God is too good to send anyone to hell if he only is any good.
9. Preach the universal Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man, so as to show that no second birth is really needed.
10. Do not rebuke the worldliness of the church, but fall in with the amonument policy. Instead of meeting for prayer let the people "sit down to eat and drink and rise up to play."

The official Catholic directory of 1981 shows the Roman Catholic population in the United States was 20,091,593; an increase of 1,301 over 1929. The total number of converts to Roman Catholicism in the United States was 39,528, an increase of 1,926 over last year. There are fifty-four hundred and fifty-two parishes in the country, with 5,743 mission churches in which services are held. They have 145 seminaries with 17,616 students for the priesthood, and 222 colleges for boys and 725 academies for girls. They have 7,887 free parochial schools with an enrollment of 2,283,084.

Private concerns in America make the paper money for one-half of the nations of the world. One factory alone manufactures paper money for forty-one foreign countries. The Chinese were the first to make paper money. They began its use about the year 800. Early Chinese paper money was very cumbersome, the bills being nine inches by thirteen inches.

The American one dollar bill lasts on an average of one year. The $10 bill lasts about four.

The United Presbyterian gives credit to the Christian World for the following statement: "The King David Hotel of Jerusalem is said to be the most modern hotel in the Near East. It cost $1,450,000, and is now open to the public. From its windows may be seen the Tomb of David, the Jordan Valley, the Dead Sea and Moab." The Church of the Nazarene owns property directly across the street from this magnificent hotel.

To aid in its war on cancer the New York Memorial Hospital is having a giant 500,000-volt X-ray tube built. This monster tube was developed by Dr. W. W. Cochrane in the General Electric laboratory. It is said to exceed by 300,000 volts, the most powerful X-ray machines now in medical use. There is a tube of 5,000,000 volts at the Carnegie Institution of Washington, but it is incapable of use in medicine. The United Presbyterian.

Prohibition leaders are planning an extensive educational program to secure the allegiance of the coming generation to the Eighteenth Amendment. They plan a national crusade of young people, to be known as The Allied Youth. This organization will work in cooperation with the Allied Business Men and the Allied Campaigners in a national organization known as Allies for Prohibition. This announcement was made by Dr. Daniel A. Poling, national Christian Endeavor leader. The campaign will be modeled after the famous Flying Squadron campaign conducted by Governor J. Frank Hanley, of Indiana, a campaign that had much to do with getting the Eighteenth Amendment passed. More than 1,500 mass meetings will be held by the Allied Campaigners between September, 1931, and June, 1932. A local chapter will be set up in every city visited. Beginning September first a pamphlet will be published and a "munition factory" will be set up to distribute literature. From its windows may be seen the Tomb of David, the Jordan Valley, the Dead Sea and Moab. —The Watchman-Examiner.

also others who make constant use of their Bibles have learned from experience that ordinary Bible bindings made from Cowhide or Sheepskin leathers do not give lasting service and many of those who now have in their possession a worn out Bible have concluded that the next copy they secure must be more durably bound. However, the prices for the quality they desire are almost prohibitive for the reason that the finest Goatskin bindings are only used on very expensive styles.

WE WOULD SEE JESUS

W E WERE recently in a church which, contrary to the general custom, had a motto painted on the rear wall of the auditorium which the preacher could always see as he faced his congregation. The words were, "Sirs, we would see Jesus." Perhaps many congregations have had inner desire to see Jesus through the message of the pastor or evangelist, but few have expressed that desire in such a manner.
Yet, this is the important task of the preacher. He is called to re-present Jesus to his congregation. The people of this generation are on a quest to see Jesus just as surely as those inquiring Greeks were in the days of His manhood as they expressed their desire in the words of this motto. Or as one leader of men has stated, "It is the church's duty to make Jesus indis-pen-sable to this generation."

Often it has been stated that this generation is "gospel hardened."
This is hardly the case. For one to be gospel hardened he must successively hear the gospel and continually reject it. Just a casual observer will be convinced that this generation has heard little of the true message of Jesus.
He is a stranger to them for the ministry of this day has not generally presented Him as a divine Savior. They are not gospel hardened so much as they are gospel starved. This generation is not rejecting Jesus in the sense that some others have done, for "How can they believe on him of whom they have not heard?" They know so little about Him that they are largely pagan in their attitude and life.

Too often Jesus has been hidden behind theological statements, personal hobbies and ideas, and peculiar notions of the preacher. We have given the hungry multitudes long dissertations on theological themes and elaborate discussions of some of our pet theories and Jesus has been obscured. The "main of the street" with a hungry heart—hungry for he knows not what—is not interested in long discussions about the fundamentals of our religion, in dissertations on justification, regeneration, sanctification, predestination, foreordination, and kindred subjects. Nor is he primarily interested in a coming Jesus. His need is immediate. He needs someone to help him with his present burdens and difficulties, someone to relieve the pressure of condemnation of sins committed, someone to satisfy his heart today. These theological statements are nothing but terms which explain to the enlightened mind what Jesus does for an individual. They are valuable only as they help us to clearly see what Jesus can do for us.

But why should Jesus be hidden behind the terms which tell of His work? Why not tell of a Christ who forgives sins, the sins of the man who is feeling the weight of their guilt? Is this not justification? Why not present a Christ who is able to make men anew, to give them a new start in life with the old past blotted out and a new life within them? Is this not regeneration? Why can we not magnify an all-sufficient Savior, one who can cleanse the heart from all remaining sin and enable the believer to live a holy life? Is this not sanctification? By so doing we magnify a Christ who does the work and we do not unduly emphasize the terms which describe the work He does. It is a mistake to say as one preacher said in our hearing recently, “The sweetest word to me is sanctification.” The sweetest word to all truly devoted Christians, to all sanctified ones, is Jesus. There is no spiritual life without Him. So let us not hide Jesus behind our theological terms. Let us tell the world of a Jesus who saves.

Others are hiding Him behind their notions of Christian living. Some have the ordinances overshadow Him, some through emphasis of the negations of the Christian religion cloud their vision of Him. But it is not the ordinances, nor the negations of religion that the hungry “man of the street” needs. Too often he will accept these as a form, or as a quantity of praction. He will deny himself of things in which sinners engage in order to make himself better. How much better it is to emphasize that Jesus is the ruler of the Christian in his conduct as well as in his heart life. That the Christian will not engage in certain practices, he will not go to certain places, wear certain things, and he will be separate from the world because of what Jesus is to him. That he is doing it for Jesus’ sake, or to be like Him. There is no greater appeal for clean living than that of challenging people to do so for Jesus’ sake. Let us let them see Jesus as the ruler of their lives, and that for His sake they will refrain from worldly practices. A true appreciation for Jesus will forever settle the question of worldliness.

The preacher is under obligation to present Jesus to this generation. To magnify Him above the terms which describe what He does for us. To urge men to see that Jesus is the one to satisfy their present needs, and that when present needs are satisfied and proper adjustments are made the future will take care of itself. To tell of Jesus as the Lord and ruler of life and that for His sake we will refrain from practices with which He is not pleased. Let us make Jesus indispensable to this generation for there is a great longing on the part of sinful men to see Jesus.—D. S. C.
importance of the ministry of the Spirit. Christ's atoning work was done. He said, "It is finished!" No more suffering for sin! No more matchless teaching! As from the resurrection and ascension, as proof of His death, the miracles are wrought. The divine life of the God-man has been lived before men. The material of the four Gospels yet all unwritten, is complete. The disciples have heard and witnessed it all. They have got their instruction in all their subsequent preaching. And yet! Mark it! Yet outside of Jesus' only-family of brothers and sisters perhaps not one soul in the world was converted. And after Jesus ascended during the ten days before Pentecost, which included one Lord's day, we do not know of a single convert.

Does not that, that divinely called preachers may know the Son of God as an atomic Savor, and the teachings of His Gospels and the story of His miracles and the proof of His deity and ascension, and their own authenticated ordination to the ministry and still win no souls?

But when the very body of preachers and Christian believers have observed the Son of God and spent ten days together preparing for the coming of the Holy Spirit; then "suddenly" the promise of the Father and of the Son was verified. The Holy Spirit fell upon that prayer-meeting and the community around was swept with interest. Then mighty conviction at the simple mention of an unwatered fishermen who knew only the gospel of the Son of God. Under the power of the Holy Spirit those who had come together to mock and jeer "were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, men and brethren, what shall we do?" And Peter said unto them, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins: and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "With many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation. Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls" (Acts 2:41, 47).

One hundred and twenty "all filled with the Holy Spirit" in the morning; and about three thousand converts before night! That beat the precious Sunday, without the Holy Spirit, out of sight!

It was a wonderful eye-opener to that early church. They did not soon forget the stupendous importance of having the constant co-operation of the Holy Spirit. Read the result for yourself, Peter, writing John the name of Jesus' Christ of Nazareth was the miracle wrought. "For there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12). Is there going to come to their own company and reported, verse 23. And when their place was shaken when they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness" (Acts 4:31). So Peter was continually filled and filled for every occasion and every emergency.

Take the case of Saul (afterward St. Paul). And Ananias departed and entered into the house; and layeth his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou earnest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 9:17). So this matchless apostle, like all the rest, had to have his Pentecost and depend for his success on the perpetual ministry of the Holy Spirit.

The twelve apostles directed the church to look out seven men for deacons, of good report, full of the Spirit and of wisdom, and, they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 6:3). In his short but wonderful career, that was his normal experience. When on trial for his life, preparatory to obtaining his martyr's crown, "the men full of the Holy Ghost looked up straightly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God" (Acts 7:55, 56).

No sooner had deacon Philip led a great re- vival in Samaria than the mother church at Jerusalem sent Peter and John down that they might receive the Holy Ghost" (Acts 8:15). "Paranabas was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord" (Acts 11:24). Paul came to Ephesus and found a little church of twelve male members (probably twenty-four females, but in those days uncounted). He at once asked, and we receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed? But they had not been told of Him. Paul at once had an altar service, got the whole church at the altar and all received the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 19:1-2). Some of the Paul wrote a message to the church at Ephesus to "be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5:18). And so it goes, on and on, through the New Testament.

III. We may ask, Is the importance of the Holy Spirit's co-operation verified by modern experience? Unhesitatingly we answer, Yes! Every truly great preacher has honored and exalted the Holy Spirit and unceasingly sought His aid. And every man who has neglected the Spirit in his ministry, however noble his personal endowments and fine his culture, has been a signal failure.

All well-read Christians know of Jonathan Edwards, the American contemporary of John Wesley, who also was a mighty man of prayer. All have heard of the mighty sermon he preached on "Sinners in the hands of an angry God," when many of his hearers rose and grabbed the pews and threw their arms around the pillars of the church to keep them from slipping into hell. But all do not know how it was that such a man spoke to the people that morning that brought scores into the kingdom. It was because that man of prayer had taught his people to pray; and they prayed all night before that sermon was preached, that the Holy Spirit would be present with power upon the people.

That mighty man of God who has the reputation of having fathered more braves than any other man in all American history, never dreamed that he could bring things to pass without the help of the Holy Spirit.

When I was in Scotland, riding on a non-stop train from Glasgow to Edinburgh with Rev. George A. Black, he pointed out to me the village of Chirns, where, after two days and an all night of prayer by the church, young John Livingston stood on his church steps and preached Sunday morning with the rain splashing his face, to a vast audience that the church could not hold, and saw over five hundred brought to Christ in that one service. No one ever hears anything about the greatness of this preacher or that sermon. Possibly he never preached a great sermon in his life. But the words of the message, however simple, were burned arrows shot by the convicting power of the Holy Spirit, that pierced human hearts and accomplished their divinely intended result.

Doubtless it was simply the union of the Holy One, that wrought so mightily.

Rev. John Wesley Redfield (born 1810) was one of these early Methodist preachers on whom the unceasing of God peculiarly rested. On a certain Sunday evening he felt a strange impression that the Holy Spirit would be with him in awful power, and that he must begin the service by announcing to the congregation that there would be such a display of divine power that night as they had never witnessed, and that the probation of one soul would end that night. It seemed to him extremely unreasonable, but still he made the announcement. He afterward wrote, "An unsteady power lifted me up... The thrill of heavenly power I then felt I can never describe. It was a power given me for the occasion, and it seemed to me it would move a nation or shake a world. Before the sermon was finished the people, uninvited, rose to their feet screaming for mercy. After the altar space was filled several hundred more rose as seekers. Hundreds were converted and for many years that occasion was referred to as "the great night!" A woman afterward confessed that six weeks before she dreamed three times in one night that her probation would end in just six weeks. That night six weeks were ended, and she was gloriously saved.

Mr. Redfield was afterward appointed to be pastor of a backslidden church. After much prayer and weeping he announced a revival meeting. "In the first service," he wrote, "I felt an unearthly thrill, charging me from head to foot, while the place was filled with the awful presence of God. In a few minutes the power of God broke like a thunder-clap upon the people, and such falling, shouting, screaming and crying for mercy I had no thought of seeing in that place."

Now, in all the lists of the great preachers of the world John Wesley Redfield was never once named. But, by prayer, he lifted himself up to the Holy Spirit, and the Spirit supplied the greatness.

Charles G. Finney has been called the prince of evangelists. Probably he was the greatest soul-winner of the Christian centuries. Some of the scenes in his ministry were beyond description. Persons were often rendered speechless on the floor as dead! After a time they would come to, shouting the praises of God. It is a matter of record and testimony that there would be frequently a thousand or more a night in his London meetings seeking God.

Mr. Finney says of his own preaching, "I tell you this, not boastfully, but because it is a fact, and to give the praise to God. Let no man think that those sermons which have been called so powerful were productions of my heart unsanctified by the Holy Ghost. They were not mine, but from the Holy Spirit in me. I believe that all ministers called by Christ to preach the gospel ought to be, and may be, in such a sense inspired to 'Preach the gospel with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven.' All ministers may be and ought to be so filled with the Holy Spirit that all who hear them shall be impressed with the conviction that 'God is in them of a truth.'"

This was the keynote and burden of all Finney's teaching and preaching in his last days. He felt that the professors in the great theological schools and preachers, and the churches themselves were fixing their attention upon profound scholarship and study and culture, and purely human attainments in the ministry, and were losing sight of their absolute dependence upon the Holy Spirit for all true success.

I confess that Jesus is also getting a tremendous grip upon me. Sixty years ago, I graduated from college and went to Yale to study theology. In my Yale class there were six valedictorians and salutatorians of other institutions. Every breath we breathed was fragrant with the aroma of culture. But as I look back upon it all now I am compelled to admit, however reluctantly, that not one of those honor-men became eminent as a preacher. Some even lost their faith in the gospel and left the ministry. Others became distinguished as authors, scholars, and educators; but as distinguished preachers, not one! O when will the theological professors, whose business it is to make preachers, and the preachers themselves, learn this all important lesson, 'Not by might nor by power (or oratory, eloquence, scholarship, learning) but by my Spirit, saith the Lord,' shall success come.

This time then that the lictus swept over the land, and what is more they did not appear until the king had received his first son in the hand of the prophet; thereafter the people might have repented for themselves. It was thus the very crisis of the year when the locusts appeared; the April crops devoured, there was no hope of further fodder till December."—G. A. Smith.

Viewing this catastrophe upon the land in his vision, the prophet realized that it was symbolic of the hand of God coming in judgment upon Israel for her sins. Knowing that although the country and the people felt strong in their own might, yet in reality they were weak and helpless, Amos cried out, "O Lord Jehovah, forgive, I beseech thee; how shall Jacob stand? for he is small.

Hearing the repetition of the prophet the judgment was averted for the time being, "Jehovah repented concerning this: it shall not be, saith Jehovah."

In this entirety of the prophet we see clearly the power of prayer to change the administration of Providence and to avert pending calamity. Without prayer, it is just as likely that in a judge, which entails remorse and regret, yet there is a change in the administration of God toward man because of a previous change in man's attitude toward God. Herein the change of attitude was not in the people themselves but it was vicarious. The intercession of the prophet was received in lieu of a repentant people. God withheld his hand from smiting.

With the passing of one vision, again as the prophet meditated upon the sins of the nation, another vision is given unto him by Jehovah.

First among the visions was that of a swarm of locusts. The locust belongs to the grasshopper family, but is much larger than the grasshopper itself. Sometimes the locusts are six inches long. They come in huge swarms, in regular order, sweeping down upon all vegetation and leaving everything barren behind them, even the bark of the trees being eaten. As Amos looked, he beheld "in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth," yea even after the king's mowing that there had been formed by the hand of the Lord a brood of locusts. In Palestine there are two seasons of verdure, two seasons of reaping. One follows the early rains of October continuing on through the winter months until the cold becomes too intense. The other comes after the spring rains, known as the latter rains, and is the more fruitful of the two. It was at this time then that the lictus swept over the land, and what is more they did not appear until the king had received his first son in the hand of the prophet; thereafter the people might have repented for themselves. It was thus the very crisis of the year when the locusts appeared; the April crops devoured, there was no hope of further fodder till December."—G. A. Smith.

This early in the ministry of Amos we have heard only stern denunciations of the evils existing in the land, but now we see the prophet pleading for his people. Unfailing he had cried their sins. He had proclaimed the word of the Lord, "I hate, I despise your feasts, and I will take no delight in your solemn assemblies" (3:18). Moreover he had added, "The Lord Jehovah hath sworn by himself, saith Jehovah, the God of hosts: I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palace; therefore will I deliver up the city with all that is therein" (6:8). But as he sees the doom hanging low upon the nation, he retreats to prayer that God may have mercy, "Never to a people came there a true prophet who had not first prayed for them. To have entreated for men, to have represented them in the highest courts of being, is to have deserved also supreme judicial rights upon them. And thus it is that our Judges at the last day shall be none other than our great Advocate who continually maketh intercession for us. It is prayer, let us repeat, which, while it gives us all power with God, endows us at the same time with moral rights over men. Upon his mission of judgment we shall follow Amos with the greater sympathy that he thus comes forth to it from the mercy-seat and the ministry of intercession."—G. A. Smith.

While the first two visions had been in the realm of nature, the third concerns somewhat in its imagery. The Lord is standing by a wall that had been made with a plumb-line, that is, it had been built straight originally. With the plumb-line in hand, Jehovah asks of Amos, "What sent thee?" As the prophet gave reply, the sentence came, "Behold, I will set a plumbline in the midst of my people Israel; I will not again pass by them any more." Israel was like a wall that though when built was in perfect line, had become crooked, hopelessly so. Thus when the measuring line was once more let down upon its side, it is condemned to destruction; there is no hope that it can ever be brought in line again. Recognizing that the doom was inevitable, the prophet does not offer another prayer of intercession, but he confesses, "There is no hope. Jehovah he feels the possibility of true repentance, the ground of all forgiveness, is not probable. But he does pray that Jehovah may stay the plague. This time also the plea is based on the fact that under such affliction they might be able to stand, "for he is small." In answer to the prophet's prayer again the Lord is gracious.
laid waste; and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword." In the pouring out of Jehovah's wrath, the burden of righteous anger will rest principally upon the religious workers of Israel and upon their royal house.

The condemnation of Israel was not spared by their superior privileges nor by their assiduous worship. They had violated "universal laws of fidelity, kinship and humanity," and thus they like the heathen around about them would suffer punishment. These laws moreover are such as are "patent to the universal moral judgment," and if Israel had listened to the inner movements of its own moral nature instead of going on in blind, fanatical faith, she might have been saved. The same snare besets the path of men today. Because of some religious expressions to which they give most ardent devotion, they consider that they are exempt or are beyond certain fundamental principles of the moral nature. They blind themselves to the truth. "A deceived heart hath turned him aside; that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?" (Isa. 44:20).

Hitherto has been preached undisturbed in the principal narts of the kingdom of Israel, but with this denunciation of the worship of the nation and the royal house, Amaziah, the priest of the sanctuary of Bethel, becomes aroused. "There follows one of the great scenes of history—the scene which, however fast the ages and the languages, the ideals and the deities may change, repeats itself with the same two actors. Priest and man face each other—priest with King behind, man with God—and wade that debate in which the whole warfare and progress of religion consist." In the first place Amaziah sends word to the king that Amos is conspiring against him. The prophet had said that the Lord would rise up against the house of Jeroboam with a sword. It would not of necessity indicate that judgment would fall during Jeroboam's life, it might be while some descendant sat upon the throne; but with a perversion of the words of Amos he charges present conspiracy. Then he turned upon Amos himself and bade him flee from the country. With the reply that he had never sought the prophetic office but had been called by Jehovah to go and proclaim the message, Amos gives a further word of prophecy directed this time against Amaziah himself. "Thus saith, Prophesy not against Israel, and drop not thy word against the house of Isaac; therefore thus saith Jehovah: Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou thyself shalt die in a land that is unclean, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of this land."

In the last words of this invective we see again brought out the thought of the third vision. "Justice, like lightning, ever shall appear. To few men's ruin, but to all men's fear."—Stierman.

In seeking for texts we may find one in the very first verse of the chapter, "Behold, he formed locusts." The theme might be, "A Prepared Judgment," and then divisions such as these might be used, prepared against sin and transgression, prepared against sin which had repudiated the light of the moral judgment, prepared against sin against the light of special religious privilege. Another test may be found in verse three, "It shall not be, saith Jehovah." Here we may give for our subject, "The Power of Prayer," with divisions, the personal requisites for power in prayer, the responsibility to exercise power in prayer and the relation of prayer to the administration of divine Providence.

"More things are wrought by prayer Than this world dreams of."—Tennyson.

The vision of the plumb line might be taken for a lesson, then the subject deduced, "The Test of Character, in Religion." This might he approached first from the negative standpoint, and accordingly the first division could be that the test of character in religion is not of necessity in asiduous worship. This is a resultant effect and the test of character. Moreover the test of character lies not in the endowments of any kind that may be given. Finally the true criterion of character is observance of the principles of righteousness. Failing in these we fall in the great essentials.

"For Jehovah is righteous; he loveth righteousness: The upright shall behold his face" (Psa. 11:7).

Fullness of Joy

"Thou wilt show me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore" (Psa. 16:11).

"God hath chosen the weak things."—(E) God hath chosen the weak things.

Strangers to prayer are strangers to power.
Don't Be Lopsided

Do not run everything to second coming, nor to divine healing, nor to sanctification, nor to regeneration. Try to be an all-round preacher, symmetrically developed, even, middle-of-the-road, steady, unblushing. Giving each his portion in due season. Thus you will minister to, and bless everyone who sits under your ministry. It is a great calling to preach and do it successfully.

The Portrait of a Great Teacher

Glenn Frank, in McClure's Newspaper Syndicate, gives a Portrait of a Great Teacher that is worth passing on to the ministry. We greatly need teachers in the ministry. Read this carefully.

Great scholars are numerous.
Great teachers are rare.

There are probably fewer great teachers now than there were fifty years ago; there will probably be still fewer great teachers fifty years hence.

The god of research is slowly but surely prowling the followings of the god of teaching.

The teacher of 1850 was mainly a man with an object.
The teacher of 1950 may be merely a man with a subject.

Schools have two gigantic responsibilities, viz.: The responsibility of investigation; The responsibility of interpretation.

The man of the laboratory may investigate
The man of the lecture room may interpret.

The teacher has a different and, shall I say, divine mission than either the investigator or the interpreter.

These men deal with the matter of their subjects.
The teacher must deal with the minds of his students.

Schools have many functions but their chief function is to furnish society with three sorts of servants, viz.: Investigators, Interpreters, Insiprers.

Speaking rather loosely, for a moment, the teacher is of the third sort.
The teacher’s primary business is that of a stirrer-up.

He is not, save secondarily, a salesman of knowledge.

He is, primarily, a stimulator of curiosity.

But the great teacher manages to combine all three functions to his ministry to the minds of his students.

The great teacher is an investigator; he is not content to squat submissively behind the breastworks of accumulated knowledge; he flits with the unknown out on the frontiers of knowledge; only so can he bring the spirit of intellectual adventure and conquest into his classroom; an incurious man cannot stimulate curiosity.

The great teacher is an interpreter; he not only knows his facts, but he knows what they are worth; he knows more about his own subject than anyone else, but he knows enough about other subjects to keep his own subject in perspective.

The great teacher is an inspirer; he knows that the art of teaching lies in starting something in the student’s mind; he is not content with merely putting something into the student’s mind, as a butcher stuffs a sausage skin.

In short, the great teacher is a great man.

Why Not Dignified in Speech?

Not a few Christians so-called are guilty of the use of language that is very unbecoming. There is no dignity or respect shown in their choice of words. They address individuals, nearly everybody, as a “guy.” Little children are referred to as “kids.” An elderly woman is classed as an “old dame,” or a “cat.” An old man is dubbed “whiskey.” A young fellow of responsibility is designated a “prude,” “song-of-a-gun,” “O Lordy,” and “heavens” are of frequent exclamation.

Some preachers have fallen into this nasty habit. Does the Christian religion change the language of a man or woman? I aver that it does, and this “low down” language, which is often used in the pulpit is not any better than the language that is used outside of the church. It is the language of the man of the world, not the language of a Christian.

We have all seen examples of this language in the pulpit. The teacher is not above the common language of the people, but he is above the language of the preacher.

VIII. THE END OF AGE

Text: Hebrews 1:1-14 and 1 Peter 3:21-25

INTRODUCTION: When I was a boy of six, I heard little of end of age. I heard it today.
Parable of the Supper

Introduction—There are key words in all Christ’s parables.

1. Note that the Word Come IS Suggestive of

1. The preparation made.
   a. Supper, teaches us of the provision made for our spiritual natures.
   b. Our ability to come, “whoever will.”
   c. The welcome awaiting all who come, as the prodigal.
   d. The need to come, danger in sparing.
      a. What is the spurn invitation.
      b. N. B. Cyclone collar.
   e. Advantage of coming.

2. Christ’s sympathy IS Real. Because His Strength was Real, all the heartaches and pains that any person can possibly experience in human suffering. He knows how to sympathize.

3. Through His divine nature those experiences of His earthly life are facts today. We forget the experiences of suffering as the ways pass by and time heals the broken parts.

4. Our ability to sympathize with those who have fresh experiences, with whom the suffering is real because of recent occurrences. With Christ the facts of His suffering and temptation are living facts, just as they were in the hour of His trial. Does this not bring real sympathy to us in these hours of suffering and trial?

V. THE SYMPATHETICITY OF CHRIST

Text—For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin (Heb. 4:15).

Adam Clarke suggests this translation: “We have not a high priest who cannot sympathize with our weaknesses.”

Introduction:

All people have times when they crave real sympathy. Suggest some of these times. It is comforting to know we can look to Christ, our Savior for such sympathy.

I. WHAT IS REAL SYMPATHY?

Definition—Sympathy is the quality of being affected by the state of another with feelings corresponding in kind—a fellow-feeling.

1. Sympathy is usually based on the law of common suffering. We go for sympathy to those who have suffered. For the deepest sympathy to those who have suffered as we now suffer.

2. Knowledge is necessary to real sympathy. I cannot sympathize with one if I am ignorant of his need of sympathy, or of his suffering.

3. Christ’s suffering was of such a character that He knows how to sympathize in human suffering.

4. There were crowded into the last few hours of His earthly life all the heartaches and pains that any person can possibly experience in human suffering. He knows how to sympathize.

5. Through His divine nature those experiences of His earthly life are facts today. We forget the experiences of suffering as the ways pass by and time heals the broken parts.

6. Our ability to sympathize with those who have fresh experiences, with whom the suffering is real because of recent occurrences. With Christ the facts of His suffering and temptation are living facts, just as they were in the hour of His trial. Does this not bring real sympathy to us in these hours of suffering and trial?

VI. HIS Present Sympathy with His Children

“Sympathizes with us in our weaknesses.”

Note His union with the Christian in suffering is vital.

1. In speaking to Saul of Tarsus He said, “Why persecutest thou me?”

2. He was in such a union with the persecuted Christians that He was persecuted as they were persecuted by them.

3. Does this not bring blessing to us today?

4. His union with the Christian in distress.

“Insasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren,” He said (Matt. 25:40). On the other hand He felt it when His brethren were not relieved in their distresses. The child of God has no experience into which Christ does not enter with sympathy.

5. The final basis of His sympathy and help, “For in that He himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted” (Heb. 2:18).

6. “He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities.”

A Finished Work

A country cartwright, who was deeply concerned about his salvation, could not see how it was possible to be saved without “doing something.” His wife was a happy believer, invited an evangelist who was preaching in the village to tea, in the hope that he might have a talk with her husband. Taking the visitor to his workshop, he showed him a wheel completely lying ready to put on, and another half finished on his bench. Lifting a plane, the evangelist was about to bring it across the spokes of the finished wheel, when the cartwright grasped his arm saying, “That one is finished.” “Is it?” said the preacher, “then I suppose I would spoil a finished job by trying to do something to it.” Then laying his hand on the cartwright’s shoulder, he quietly remarked, “You have more concern about your own work than you have about Christ’s. By seeking to add something to it you would only spoil it.” The man saw his mistake, and expressed in what Christ had “finished,” and was at peace. There is nothing to do for salvation.

Nothing, sinner, no,

Jesus did it—did it all,

Long—long ago.”—Selected.

Christ Seeking Men

Mr. Spurgeon tells the story of the father of Thomas a’Becket, who went into the Crusades and was taken prisoner by the Saracens. While a prisoner, a Turkish lady fell in love with him. When he was set free and returned to England, this lady followed him at the earliest opportunity. She did not know where to find him and the only English word she could speak was the given name of her lover, Gilbert. She determined to go through all the streets of England crying the name of Gilbert till she found him. She went to London first, and the passerby on every street were astonished to hear an eastern maiden crying, “Gilbert! Gilbert!” She passed from city to city, continually calling, until one day, there was an answer and she found him whom she sought. Christ is seeking the sinner and that awakened soul, pierced through with the Spirit-driven arrows of conviction, may find Him if He will but begin to cry, “Jesus! Jesus!” Stop that weary wandering and that aimless longing. Be... gin now to call upon the name of the Lord, and the same Lord that blessed those thousand at Crefeld and saved the Philippine jailer and his house, will bring peace and grace to you. —Selected.

The Form of the Fourth

Christ is still receiving sinful men. The word of faith is still nigh us, even in our hearts, if we will not violate it. During the great German offensive in the spring of 1918, a young American was attached to a certain hospital unit as ambulance driver. When the offensive started, he was sent out with other drivers of his unit to bring in the wounded. The Germans were pushing back the British lines and heavily shelling the area back of the lines, trying to throw the retreating forces into a rout. Back and forth through this inferno these brave men drove their machines, each trip bringing out the wounded and bleeding bodies of the unfortunate victims of war's dreadful holocaust. One by one the ambulance drivers were wounded or killed. At last, after six hours of driving into this tempest of shot and shell and out again, a large shell exploded between the two ambulances directly in front of this young man, killing both drivers and leaving him the sole survivor of the unit. When he reached the hospital, he collapsed, and said he could not go back again. The surgeon, in command told him he would have to; that he must gather himself together, and go back. Despairingly he climbed back into the car, and as his hands took hold of the steering wheel, he became conscious of another person in the car beside him. At that very instant his nerves became quiet, his self-possession returned and back to the front he drove. For twelve hours longer he drove his car before being relieved and all that time the Pres- ente was with him. In testimony he said, "I had never been specially religious, but I know who the Person was that rode with me through those hours. Since that moment I have lived a clean life and that Person has become my Christ and Savior and my life is His from now on." —Selected.

The Deliverer

At one time the life of John G. Paton was in imminent danger while he was engaged in his missionary work in the South Seas. He had almost given up hope of life, although still trying to pacify the blood-thirsty natives when far out on the horizon a ship's sails were seen and a line of smoke going up into the sky. "The fire ship comes," cried the natives in wild terror, and ran to the hill. The chief who had been so cruel came to beg Paton for his life. It seemed like the last judgment to these poor creatures. When the ship came, it proved to be one of Britain's men-of-war, and the sight so affected the natives that they decided to leave the man who had such powerful friends to do his work unhindered.—Selected.

God is Love

A missionary asked some Indians, "Do your gods love you?" The gods never think of loving," was the careless answer. The missionary asked, "Do your gods love Jesus Christ?" One of them said, "Yes, he is savior of the world." The missionary said, "Read it again." As he listened, he said, "That is large light, read it again." The second time the wonder-lous message was read and the Indian was greatly impressed. He said, "That is true; I feel it." The missionary, Nott, was once explaining the love of Christ to some awakened Tablites. One of them said, "Is it then really true that God so loved you and us that He gave His only begotten Son for us?" Nott affirmed that it was really true. The man cried out, "Oh, and thou cannot speak of such love without tears?" himself weeping with joy. It is only in Christ that men are hardened through the thought that the thought of the love of God no longer moves us. Truly, "the beloved not knoweth not God."—Selected.

The Service of Women

Justinian, the Roman emperor, acknowledged that his wife, Theodora, deserved more than the title of empress. Her influence was not merely the possession of her husband, Theodora. Pellices said he got all his eloquence, and statesmanship from his wife. The wife of Pliny sang his stanzas to the sound of a flute, and suggested the changes necessary to make them the expression of literary genius. De Jacques C, the celebrated French writer, said, "Of all the blessings which God has given me, the greatest of all in my eyes is to have lighted on Maria Matley." Martin Luther said of his wife, "I would not exchange my poverty with her for all the riches of Cæsars without her." John and Jacobi, the distinguished divine, said of his wife, "She never by word or look discouraged me from running all hazards for the salvation of my country's liberties." When the leaders of the French army had about decided to give up the attempt to capture Troyes because it was so heavily-garrisoned, Jeanne d'Arc entered the room and told them they would be inside the castle in three days. "We would willingly wait six days," said one of the leaders. "Sixl!" she said, "you shall be in it tomorrow." And the next day, under her heroic leadership, the army entered the city.—Selected.

The God of Battles

The statement of Napoleon that God was on the side of the strongest battalions is disproved over and over. In 1914 the German army was about in sight of Paris. The British army, outnumbered three or four to one, repelled wave upon wave of attack in the battle of the Marne. One more attack and the thin line, exhausted and without ammunition, would have been brushed out of the way and the Germans would have been in Paris. But that attack never came. German prisoners afterward said they saw the British were being reinforced. No reinforcements were received; there were none to come. But more than one has told the incident and expressed the utmost confidence that God put confusion into the enemy just as He did many times of old. This is an age of skepticism, of doubt, of criticism. In many quarters it is regarded as an indication of superior knowledge and strength to doubt. But God still has a name who can march around the Jericho of sin and shout until the walls fall down. He still has a few who are willing to take nothing but the lamp of truth and the pitchfork of humanity and ery, "Salvation in the name of the Lord."—Stif.

Faith and Victory

A New York merchant once asked Morrison, one of the earliest missionaries to China, if he expected to make any impression on the heathen of China. "No, sir," he replied, "but I expect God will." The sequel of that faith was seen in 1913 when John R. Mott and George She-wood, Eddy spent a number of weeks preaching in the principal university city of China. They had to speak through interpreters, yet the largest audience rooms which could be secured were packed by university students and professors and government officials. Who were admitted by ticket only, to listen to the presentation of the gospel. Many prominent men embraced Christianity in response to the appeals made. In fourteen cities in three months' time there were seven thousand inquirers, mostly among the government students. Faith in God brings to pass the seemingly impossible.—Selected.

Measuring from the Depths

A minister relates the following experience: "When in Scotland recently I went to a very interesting place, the observatory at Paisley. I saw there an instrument for measuring earthquakes, a seismological register. A block of stone, twenty-four solid feet in depth, was thrust into the ground down and down it went, standing like an isolated column in the vacuum carefully preserved on every side of it. On the top a delicate instrument was poised, which actually wrote with a pencil a record of the vibrations and oscillations that were taking place in every part of the globe. Said the gentleman in charge, 'If an earthquake were to take place in Japan, its motions would be written here as faithfully as though we were on the spot to measure it.' 'Then what about the rumbles here in Paisley?' I said. 'You make noises enough in your streets; would they be registered by your instrument?' 'No,' was the reply. 'We do not trouble about vibrations on the surface. We measure from the depths.' This is God's way of measuring men. A marble mansion may house a deep-dyed criminal; a physically perfect body may have a devil in it. Because Jesus knew what was in man, He said, after naming a dark list of evils, "All these evil things come from within, and defile the man."—Selected.

HOLY SPIRIT AND PERSONALITY

If you ask how the Holy Spirit can dwell within us and work through us without destroying our personality, I cannot tell. How can the electric current fill and transform a dead wire into a live one, which you dare not touch? How can a magnetic current fill a piece of steel and transform it into a mighty force which by its touch can cut tons of iron, as a child would, lift a feather? How can fire dwell in a piece of iron until its very appearance is that of fire, and it becomes a firebrand? I cannot tell.

Now, what fire and electricity and magnetism do in iron and steel the Holy Spirit does in the spirits of men who believe on Jesus, follow Him wholeheartedly, and trust Him intelligently. He dwells in them, and transforms them, till they are all alive with the very life of God.—Col. Breegle in Pentecostal Herald.

"Good work is always rewarded in the end, but God's approval and one's own self-approval should be enough."
PROMISES OF REVIVALS

By J. W. Slaton

O Lord, I have heard thy speech and was afraid; O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy (Habakkuk 3:2).

The verse analyzed: (1) The heart cry of a prophet of God for a revival. The church, God's people, need to cry to God for a revival as Habakkuk did. The value and relation of prayer are seen here, if we would have revivals.

(2) The prophet heard the speech, or the Word of God; Habakkuk heard the Word of God. The preachers of God and the church must believe the Word of God as the ground of assurance. His promises are yea and amen and cannot fail. We must believe the Word of God altogether and not doubt the inspiration of it.

(3) The prophet was afraid before God when he heard His Word. He feared for the priests and the people. We need a revival of godly, holy fear in the ministry and the church as Habakkuk had it.

(4) The prophet had the burden of prayer when he heard the Word of the Lord and had fear. The ministry and the church today need the burden of prayer as Habakkuk had it, then, and not until then, can or will the ministry and the church pray for revivals as we should. We need a revival of intercessory prayer for revivals.

(5) The prophet believed that God could give a revival in the midst of the years, in the time of need. We need a revival in the midst of this age and time of modernism, skepticism, compromise and unbelief, and bless God, we can have it.

(6) The prophet desired to see the power of God manifested by working before the people. We need the mighty works of God manifested in the conviction of sin, the salvation of sinners, the sanctification of believers, the healing of the sick. Habakkuk believed in the supernatural work of God, and we need to see it today.

Some Promises of Revivals

"Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?" (Joel 2:17).

Habakkuk prayed that God would make known, he meant for God to do mighty things before the people to show them that God was with them; and, God gave the following: "And I will raise up an house of David to sit on the throne of the kingdom of my father Jacob, and I shall set him on his throne; and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." (Habakkuk 2:18-20).

"The special promise of that greater revival which was given to the early church on Pentecost given as follows: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my spirit." (Joel 2:28, 29).

Habakkuk prayed that God would make known, he meant for God to do mighty things before the people to show them that God was with them; and, God gave the following: "And I will raise up an house of David to sit on the throne of the kingdom of my father Jacob, and I shall set him on his throne; and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." (Habakkuk 2:18-20).

II. METHODS OF PROMOTING A REVIVAL

By Rev. James Caughey

Compiled by Dr. H. Orton Wiley

The Influence of a Single Conversion

O ne case of conversion may stand in the same relation to a revival as the first drop to the coming shower. When twenty, thirty, fifty, or one hundred get converted to God within a few hours, days, or weeks, then it is that the divine glory has descended upon the tabernacle, and the arm of God is being made bare, in an extraordinary revival of pure religion. This is the sign between God and His praying people; this is the visible token that He has come down into the midst of them for purposes of mercy—that is, for the revival of His own work. It is as much their privilege to accept the sign when one sinner has been converted in their assembly, as when fifty are gathered; and they must be assured that if He have saved one He is able and willing to save hundreds and thousands. But why does He not? Because it does not always happen that His people recognize the token of His presence, nor the indications of His will. There is now the sound of abundance of rain; one drop is frequently the forerunner of as heavy a shower as the descent of fiery in a moment. It is thus the Lord usually signals to His ministers and people that He is ready and willing to work, if they will but co-operate. He has now come down, they may depend upon it, to make them and the places around about his hill a blessing (Heb. 3:2). God has appeared in His temple, "to beautify the house of His glory" (Zech. 13:8). If they enter into His gracious designs, the time is near at hand when the Lord shall inquire of that church, "Who are these that fly like a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?" Let her ministers and members reply, "These are thine, O Lord God, souls but newly found in Thee; gathered and gathered into Thy church, that they may obtain a preparation for their final flight into paradise." Let them answer thus; and they will soon have it impressed upon their hearts by the Lord God of hosts, "Therefore, thy feet shall be upon the threshold of the gates of hell; they shall see Zion in great prosperity, and multitudes of converted sinners added to the ranks of the faithful.

It may be because of the close connection which exists often between the conversion of one sinner and that of hundreds, that our Savior tells us, "There is joy in the presence of the angelic God over one sinner that repenteth." The Lord, my brother, may have manifested His power in behalf of that one soul, in answer to the cries, perhaps, of one or more devoted members of your church. And if the effectual fervent prayer of one righteous man avails so much, what will be the united prayers of your entire church! If one sigh of a true Christian," says an old divine, "waits the bark to the desired haven, or stirreth Zion's ship, how much more a gate of sighs, breathed by hundreds of believers! If one trumpet sounds so loudly in the ears of God, how much more a concert of all the silver trumpets in Zion's sound- ing tower! Where so many hands are lifted up, how many blessings may they not pull down from heaven?"

We must do God's work in His time, but if we content ourselves by saying, "We have had a very poor meeting, the revival has begun, surely, and yet amount no time to serve for the whole week in order to fan the flame already kindled," the next Sabbath we may find that He is not with us in our time. It may be with us as with the Israelites, who murmured against Moses, and refused to go up and possess the land in God's time. They believed the report of the un- believing spies, and offended the Lord, who had intended to subdue the whole country before them. Some of them did go up at their own time, but God was not among them and they fell before their enemies. The whole congregation of Israel were ordered to retrace their steps, into the wilderness, and a judicial punishment was in- flicted which extended through that entire genera- tion. I have seen many a flame of reviving piety kindled and extinguished in this way.

I have however, known instances when, through love of the world, love of ease, or through inattention to the work of the Spirit and the call of Providence, churches have been left in a state of great barrenness; and where they have re- peated, humbled themselves before God, entered the field of conflict for revival, and by His assistance have obtained splendid victories over the powers of hell.

IV. Flowerly Preaching

We may say of many sermons, as the countryman, of an unctionately painted head: "What an excellent skull is this—and yet there is no brain in it!" A discourse, fraught with "picked phrases" and pretty flowers only, but containing nothing to arouse the slumber, or to draw sinners into more entire devotion to God, is a sad misapplication of talents. We may say of such a discourse, as Heroditus did the head of Onocilla, "It was desitute of brains; and instead thereof, was filled with honeycombs." We may denounce against such sermons, as did Antiochus of the garland of roses sent him by the King of Persia, perfumed with sweet spices and odors. He accepted them, but his reply in Latin was equivalent to this: "The natural fragrance of the roses is lost by being mixed with artificial odors!"

There is much of this kind of "artificial per- fumery" about the preaching of some men. I was amused with a writer the other day who, when speaking of the difference between super- ficial preachers and those who go deeply into the meaning of the Holy Ghost, compared the former to the boys of apothecaries, who gather broad leaves, and white flowers from the bottom of the water; and the latter to accomplished seers, who bring up precious pearls from the bottom of the deep.

"There is a difference," says an old divine, "between washing the face of a discourse clean, and painting it: the former is beautiful and commendable; the latter, sinful and abominable. Ministers must mind the capacities of their audi- ences, and not put that meat into their mouths which their teeth cannot chew nor the stomach concoct." Their sermons tend to their own praise, but never to their hearers' profit. Such men, when their children ask bread, give them stones, which may choke them but will not nourish them. What pity he should ever teach school, who will not speak to his scholars so that they may understand.

A late divine, though not so honestly in his phrenology, is quite as severe in his remarks upon the wickedness of this soul-famishing and gospel-dishonoring preaching: "Indeed, what is more unbecoming a minister of Christ than to waste his animal spirits, as a spider does his hows, to spin a web only to catch flies; to get vain applause by a foolish pleasing of the igno- rant? And what cruelty is it to the souls of men! It is recorded as an instance of Nero's savage temper that, in a general famine, when many perished by hunger, he ordered that a ship should come from Egypt (the granary of Italy) laden with grain for the use of the wrestlers. In such extremity, to provide only for delight, that there might be spectacles at the theatre, when the city of Rome was a spectacle of such misery as to melt the heart of any but a Nero, was most bar- barous cruelty. But it is cruelty of a heavier imputation for a minister to prepare his sermons to please the foolish curiosity of fancy and flashy conceits; nay, such light vanities, that would scarce be laughed in a storm, while hungry souls languish for want of solid nourishment."

The only answer I can give is this: "We must not only strike the iron when it is hot, but strike it till it is made hot." Great occasions must not be waited for, but we must make use of orinary opportunities as they may offer." Should a great occasion again offer, make the best use of it within your power; it is easy to hammer out iron when hot; but if circumstances are nothing more than ordinary, repeat the blow, and strike with power, nor give over till sinners are broken to pieces all around you by the power of God.

V. Unconverted Ministers Cannot Succeed

I am sorry, indeed, to admit that some clergymen do acknowledge that they are not aware of any other regeneration, in their own experience, than what they are confident did take place when they were baptized in infancy. But what of that? Even a blind man may hold a candle, to enlighten others, though he himself may walk in the dark. Yes! but let him have a light, and not a candlestick without one, or a dark lan- tern; else he and those he would guide may eventually "fall into the ditch" (that is, into hell) together (Matt. 5:14). The Sun of Righteous- ness may shine through the meanest window up- on the heart of aearer equally well as through one of the cleanest and purest materials." Ay! but let him be a real window, not an imitation! From such ministerial windows, may the Lord deliver us and all our friends! Allow me, if I may, just such a window as every unconverted minis- ter. If the Sun of Righteousness should shine through such a man upon the hearts of his hearers, it would be a greater miracle than were the natural sun to send its beams through an artificial window:

"You say further: "A slender pipe may convey the 'water of life' to the souls of the people quite as well as a golden one." Yes, but let it be a pipe, and not a mere mass of lead. If a pipe, let it be connected with the fountain; else it may as well be no pipe at all! A sheet of lead may be converted into a pipe, and so may a minister; but let him be converted. A man may see him- self in a plain glass as well as in one with a gilt frame. And I have seen my likeness as well in one that had no frame at all. But let it be glass, and let it be a clean and pure mirror; else it will show no likeness at all, or at most, a false and incorrect one. The soul of a regenerated and sanctified minister of the Lord Jesus is like his sermons—a transparent mirror of eternal truth."

I remember reading the following sentiment, which I very much admired at the time, and which, I think, applies to what may be considered

A CONCESSION OF THE NAZARENE
PASTOR'S RESPONSIBILITY

By L. A. REIN

Part IV Conclusion

WE WOULD like to say a word about the part a pastor plays in his community life and interests. There was a time in the history of our church when the pastors of our local churches were more or less prominent in society. Not because they were unworthy but because the movement was misunderstood. People are at last coming to the realization that our church preaches and teaches a sane religion and a salvation which meets every human need. We are beginning to gain the respect of communists and cities and thank God. He is helping us to do it without compromising. The pastor should be a model. He should be looked upon with respect in his community. Oh, the community will not open its arms wide but they will have to respect him. I want to be widely known in my town, for my church's sake. I want to be recognized in the legitimate community. Bye, for my church's sake. I want the newspaper's friendship, for my church's sake. The people will make fun of our method of witnessing; of our radical demands, and all that, but when we pass by they should be compelled to say, "Well, regardless, he is a Christian gentleman." Any entrance into any legitimate group which a Nazarene pastor may gain should be taken advantage of for the church's sake. We have the character in our movement, therefore our reputation should be untarnished. The pastor, to a great degree, has this in his hands.

Every pastor should play some active part in his community life, especially where matters of reform are in evidence. We know that we cannot save the world through reform, but we can make it a better place in which to live. Whenever a Nazarene pastor stays in the background and does not take a positive stand for advanced moral and social reform in his community he is giving his church a black eye, and placing his denomination in a wrong light to the community in which he lives. Save yourself from becoming a public enemy unless some principle is at stake, and then be sure it is a real principle and not some whim or limited opinion of your own. He should be a member of the ministerial association, if there be one. Even though he may not like the manner of its working or even if he does not obtain much fellowship, yet the very fact of his parsonal membership gives him influence in the community he could not otherwise have.

Finally, the pastor is responsible for placing his church and the gospel of Jesus Christ before the people in his community. How can he do this? This is the big question. Every agency, and they are many, which he can use, he should use. Every means of publicity that comes to his hand he should use. Large signs, handbills, individual calling cards for all of his members, newspaper advertising in classified ads if the money is available, free write-ups about meetings, sermon subjects and series, items of interest which might draw the attention of the public, all should be used. The radio, if at all possible, should be used by every pastor. Sometimes it is difficult to break into a station that is strong enough to do any actual good, but it is one of the greatest means at our disposal and when we do have access to it we should put on an attractive program which will rightfully represent your denomination.

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate, that the pastor is the key to the situation in the Church of the Nazarene. He can either build or kill. If there is any prayer above any other, outside of that prayer which was offered by the Holy Ghost in his fiery inspiration upon his lips, it is the prayer that Solomon prayed, "O God, give me wisdom, that he needs to pray. This prayer will always be answered if it is prayed with sincerity. God never withholds any good gift from those who walk uprightly, and it may be that we will experience the same blessings as Solomon when he wisely asked for wisdom, then he also received popularity and material prosperity.

THE ANointING OF GOD

By W. G. SCHRIEwERN

I AM writing this article on June 29. Yesterday was the hottest day that I ever recall having stood in the pulpit to preach. It was 100 degrees in the shade. In spite of the intense heat, we had 372 out to Sunday school, and more than that number out to the morning preaching service. In the evening there was not even a breeze, and the air was so thick you could have rained cream from every pore in my skin. I know it is not wise to compare ourselves with others and I suspect that anyone that is able to go to work, is able to come out to worship the Lord. Yet may I not be excused when I say that the fine congregation that greeted us Sunday night, with the atmosphere so hot it would fairly wilt you, would make any pastor feel that he was appreciated, and there must be something in the doctrine of sanctification that comes out to an evening service of worship. Not very far from where our church stands is a large church of another denomination, with over twelve hundred members on its roll, and they did not have 28 people out to the evening service. We have the most loyal people in the world. I believe that there is a method of life in my life, and expect to preach it until I die.

I read, in the Chicago Tribune recently the replies of a number of people who were asked what part of the paper they read first. Some said they looked at the pictures on the back page, then turn to the headlines of the front page, then read the baseball scores. Others said they read the comic strips first, and then the column entitled "The Inquiring-Reporter," etc. That made me wonder what part of the Herald of Holiness the preachers purse first. One man told me he always looked to see if his article was printed, and read that first of all. Another said that he read the telegrams first, then the reports from the churches. Another said he read B. A. Robinson's article first, and that naturally got me to thinking what was the first thing I looked at when I got the Herald of Holiness, and I recall that I invariably turn to the editorials first. Then I want to see what Dr. Chapman has to say. Dr. Chapman is a great writer, and a man's time is invested wisely in reading what comes from his pen. But as I said, I always look at the editorials first, and read carefully to see if they line up in harmony with the doctrine we preach.

In all the years that we have taken the Herald of Holiness, and we have had it come to our home since the first copy was issued, we never remember seeing anything that was in any way contrary to the doctrine of the editor of the magazine, as to the doctrine of eternal sanctification as a second blessing; it always rings true on the day of Jesus Christ, the authenticity of the Scriptures, the personality of the Holy Ghost, etc., etc. I can hear someone say, "Why, you expect anything else?" Well, you never can tell. I remember years ago, when I was a young man, Zion's Herald of Boston would come out with some editorial belittling the-eficacy of the blood.

We went to our pastor and asked him why such a thing appeared in our church paper, and he informed me that the editor was a Unitarian. We said, "You do not mean to tell me that the editor of our church paper does not believe in the deity of Jesus Christ?" He said, "No, he does not, and it keeps us preachers checking up on him all the time." I said, "Why do you hire such a man?" He said, "Because of his scholastic and editorial ability.

That makes me wonder if the time will ever come when the Church of the Nazarene will be careless about the man that sits in the editor's chair. Thank God we have nothing to fear so far, but is it utterly unthinkable that such might take place in the days to come? Will we be more anxious to have a string of titles to his name than we are to have a man with a clear-cut experience of full salvation? Am I unduly alarmed when I am made to feel sometimes that preachers are more anxious to get a few letters attached to their name than they are to get new names in the Lamb's Book of Life? What is your object, my dear pastor, in getting this degree or that degree in college? Is it so that you may be more efficient, in soul winning, and more fitted to better things of which Jesus shed His blood and so many of the early Christians gave their life? or is there just a little tendency to burn incense to brains?

I was introduced to a colored clergyman some time ago, and he handed me his card—Dr—B. A.M.A., Ph.D., 32nd degree, and it reminded me of the story I heard of a young Hebrew who asked his father what those letters meant at the end of a man's name, and the father curtly told him it meant that the man had brains. Young Ikeey said, "Then I am going to have some cards printed, and I am going to have some letters at the end of my name." The father said, "Why, you have never been through college. You have got to be a success in order to have letters at the end of your name." "Well," Ikeey said, "I am a success, and I am going to the printers now to have some cards printed." Lol and behold! he came back the next day, and handed the father a card with the name Isaac Goldstein, F. F. F., and the father said, "For goodness sake! what do these letters F. F. F., following your name indicate." And Ikeey said "It means brains, father," and the father said, "I know they represent brains, but wherein can you show that you have brains. What do these F's mean?"

The son replied, "It means, Isaac Goldstein, two fires, one failure and a fortune."

Far be it from me to speak disparagingly of anyone who has earned his degrees, but in my life I have met some men with a number of letters to their name that did not appear to be of any assistance to them as ministers of the gospel. They have shamly failed in the work to which God had called them, if indeed God ever did call them. They have left no footprints to indite to others that they had labored in that locality. That they were educated, is no denying; that they were brilliant, well, there might be a question mark, but that they were a success—well they just were not. They surely could talk, and their vocabulary seemed inexhaustible, but there was a lack of punch in their presentation of truth, and a lack of business method in their dealings with the church work. They left the church worker at their departure then when they came.

I may be unduly alarmed, but I confess that I am fearful of the younger generation who may attempt to fill the places made vacant by such men as Dr. Bruce, Dr. Walker, C. E. Cornell, and such like, who had met the Lord and could tell me how to touch some one of whom Jesus shed His blood and so many of the early Christians gave their life, or is there just a little tendency to burn incense to brains?

I was very much impressed recently in reading some incidents in the Old Testament where trouble arose in the kingdom by the fact that the younger generation knew not the Lord as did their fathers. Here was Eli's difficulty. He was a priest of the Lord, but his sons were so bad that he could not find one to take his place. The incident persisted in having them function in the priest's office. Not only was Phineas a hypocrite in that he tried to fill the office of the priest without a personal religious experience, but he was loaded in his life, and sacrilegious in his worship. It is said of him that when he received the sacrifices from the worshippers, his first duty was to burn the fat and sacrifice to the Lord, but he was so greedy that he demanded his portion before the Lord got His. The Scriptures state that the explanation of all of this was that they knew not the Lord.

There is no fit to fill one of our holy pulpits simply because he is a preacher's son. He may be a worthless fellow, and thus he might even make a good mechanic, he might even succeed in business, but he has no place in the priest's office unless he has been called of God to fill that holy place. He may be better qualified, educationally, than the man who now officiates in that position, but the ministry is a calling too holy to follow without a divine call and divine equipment. This is not only said of Eli, but there is also reference to this same difficulty in connection with the sons of Samuel. They were not made of the stuff of which Samuel was made, and could not fit into the position of their father, and occasioned so much dissatisfaction, that the people asked for a king, which was the beginning of the end of the Israelites as a united people. Splits and divisions followed until they were all taken away captive.

O brethren! let us hold the torch of full salvation high. If a preacher of Satan has been great grace out of his heart, let him have courage to humble himself and acknowledge his fault or his sin. I know it is much easier to make a visit to some altar where there is more of the spectacular, and instead of being courageous enough to come out and say, "I have lost this great grace out of my heart because of my failure to watch and pray," to say that I never had the experience until I went to such and such place and received this gift of tongues, or the gift of healing or something else which can never take the place of that marvelous outpouring that filled the soul with holy zeal and a passion for a lost world.

Reader, is a soul of as much value to you now as when you first entered the ministry? Can you "Weep over the erring one, Lift up the fallen, Tell them of Jesus the mighty to save" with the same tender paths that you had in your first pastorate? Is there a disposition to lean upon the experience of years, or upon your-educational qualifications rather than to lean upon the Lord, and tell Him how utterly incapable we are of properly representing this great doctrine without the union of God on our hearts? Honestly now, brethren, isn't there a tendency to abandon yourself from the secret chamber and attempt to step on the holy estimation and preach to the people in an ease of and a boldness that was a stranger to you in other days? Did you not seek the quiet place alone with God and ask Him to bless the message you were about to deliver, and was there not a blessing and a power and unction in those days that you do not feel now? If that is so, 'will you not, upon reading this, repair immediately to your study and ask God to bless you and tender you as in days gone by?' Do you remember what the Lord said to David—one of the most pathetic utterances, I think, that ever fell from the lips of the Lord—"I took thee from the sheepefolds, from following sheep, to be ruler over my people." "I will set up thy seed after thee, he shall build an house for my name." God spoke to him through Nathan, the prophet, saying, "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I anointed thee king of Israel, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul. Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord to do evil in his sight?" David replied by saying, "I acknowledge my transgression, and my sin is ever before me. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not Thy holy spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation and uphold me with thy free spirit." And God answered "I have put away thy sin, and thou shalt reign over Israel." Brother, let's keep the anointing of God on our hearts at any cost. Life is too short and eternity is too long! We have a job that angels might well covet. Let's be true to our calling.

I remember when I first gave my heart to the Lord, and was working for the W. D. Brackett Shoe Company in Stoneham, Mass., that I received a young man for taking the name of the Lord in vain, and a 'smart aleck,' who overheard me, said that if what I said was true, that the Lord kept a record of everything that we do, He must hire a lot of bookkeepers and stenographers to mark it down. The radio was then unheard of, but later on someone discovered it. It now appears that every word we speak starts air waves in motion that never cease, as one scientist says, until it reaches the remotest star, and probably does cease then. A phonograph record can be reproduced a hundred years after the man who made the record has passed away and his voice can be recognized.

It may not be such a surprising thing then that "By our words we shall be justified, and by our words shall we be condemned." In fact, every discovery of science, instead of disproving God's Word, makes it appear more reasonable.

I recently was invited into a large laboratory in the city of Chicago, where X-ray machines and devices of similar nature are on display. The most of several pictures of my torso, showing the ribs, the backbone and the heart. But Robinson says in his little booklet, "My Hospital Experience," that when he took that trip to heaven, while lying in the hospital in San Francisco, the Lord let him see his own heart, and it was as white as snow. Well, the demonstrator pointed out my heart, and it was as white as snow. But only hope that when I appear before the judgment bar it will be the same. But what I started to say was that man has perfected a machine by which he can look right through you. Should it be thought a thing incredible that God could do the same thing? He then showed me the machine that registers the pulsations of the heart. This machine carries the same principle as that machine now known as the lie detector. He showed me how it worked, and told me how the dim fluctuations of the mechanism indicated when the heart was unyielding agitated. It was quite a moment—this was all—but enough to tell them that there was agitation there. There isn't a doubt in my mind but that there are more connections between the natural and the spiritual than we dream of, and I haven't a doubt, but what the lie detector will be a practical thing some day in the courtrooms.

During the severe hot spell we had during the last week in June Dr. Bundesen, head of the Health Department of Chicago, in giving some good advice as to how to keep cool, mentioned, among other things, "Do not get angry." It is a recognized fact now among medical men that anger affects the physical man, and that to fly into a rage pours into his system a poison which nature must eliminate to bring him back to normal. If that is not yet familiar, whereby a man states that which is not true, his conscience bearing witness to the fact that he is lying, may so affect the heart that the result may be diagnosed by the sensitive electrical appliances connected with his body? I got to thinking that if man could so arrange a piece of mechanism that could carry our words as the radio thousands of miles away, take a picture of

While waiting for a street car, at an intersection in our city, recently, my attention was riveted upon what once had been a home of pastoral proportions. It consisted of a beautiful lawn surrounded by an iron fence with great stone posts. The building itself was made up of reds and alpines, and perhaps fifty or seventy-five years ago was the pride of that section of the city, and the inviting home was given many a covetous glance by the passerby who were less favored with this world's goods. In imagination I could see the children and young folks sporting on the spacious lawns with croquet, tennis, etc. But the face of the community has now changed—garages, storehouses, and similar buildings surround it, and it has gradually fallen into decay. The tony of time has not only eaten into the posts and iron palisades, but into the building itself, until it is one great ruin. I suspect some legal entanglement keeps it from being torn down, and some practical structure erected to take its place. But the thing that impressed me was that it was a ruin. Many a building around Chicago has fallen to pieces, but none will impress the visitor, because they are small, and of very little value or importance, but this great ruin will catch the passing eye, and I was made to think of some other ruins; ruins in the spiritual realm; men who once towered above their fellows, men upon whom holy men laid their hands; and they have been authorized to preach the gospel to the sons of men, who, in an evil hour, under more or less severe temptation have, for a few moments of selfish gratification, become spiritually ruined.

As I stood at the corner looking at this grand old building, I thought of one who in my younger days was a flaming evangelist, and whose name was on the back of a religious weekly was so popular that he did not have to print his slate, but had more calls than he could possibly fill; one whose ministry was such that when people heard him, were moved to soliloquies and then to a Savior, who is now dead and not, nor do many people want to hear me preach. I thought of another whose books showed familiarity with spiritual themes and truths, and who, to be announced as a worker at one of the camps, would bring people to the point of some other world never go, who is now heard no more. I say, as I stood on the corner looking at the house, I seemed to hear it speak to me and say, "It is true I have fallen into ruin, I have known better days, but my present condition is no fault of my own. I did the work acceptably for which the architect made me, and while I deplore the fact that I no more attract the proud witness of the passerby, yet I have this consolation that I am not to blame. I successfully fulfilled the mission which my maker had in view when I was built"; but men who are made in the image of God, and called to a high and holy calling, given a job that angels might covet, that of preaching a Savior to a lost race, and redeeming men from the power of sin, have, by volition, become a ruin, and the greater their publicity, and the greater their usefulness, the greater the ruin. Have a care, and see that you walk circumspectly; and not as a fool, for "the days are evil and only he that endures to the end shall be saved." "Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."
There is much in the world that is called love that is not love at all. We speak of a young man's love for a young woman, when infrequently it is the vilest and the most unbridled lust. We speak of one man's love for another. What? do we really mean? Only this, the two men are friendly because in many respects they are congenial and enjoy one another's society. But if one of the two men did one thing that offends the other the so-called love is turned into utter indifference or even into bitter hate. This was never love. This was mere self-centered-fondness.

But real love is entirely unstifled. It loses sight of self-interests, and sets itself to seeking the interest of the one loved. This is God's attitude to us. His great heart of love is moved with a consuming, absorbing desire for our highest good, even the salvation of our souls. His is a matchless love! A voluntary love! A universal love! A love that transforms and makes us new creatures.

II. We Are in the Love of God. This is a very expressive figure. But it seems nothing less than this strength of figure will satisfy the inspired mind and the inspiring spirit, whose words are before us. It is "In him we live and have our being." We are enveloped in the love of God.

For example and illustration let us notice how parental love envelops and wraps itself around a child. Look at the infant's cradle. Mark the solicitude, the long days of watching, the sleepless nights, when that little babe is the one thought of the mother. Would it be exaggeration to say, in fact would it not be the truth to say, that little child is in, exists in, the love of the mother?

I have read the story of how a great eagle in Scotland one day seized a little babe out of a cradle that was in the shade of a cottage where the mother was working close by. The whole village ran after it, but the eagle soon perched itself upon the loftiest crag of the nearby cliffs, and everyone despised of the child's being recovered. A sailor tried to climb the steep but his strong limbs gave way and he had to give up the task. A strong-minded Highlander, accustomed to climbing the hills, tried next but his feet slipped and he was precipitated to the bottom of the cliff and was seriously injured. But a poor peasant woman came rushing forward. She put her feet on one shelf of the rock and then on the second and third, up and up she went. The people who were watching stood trembling at the edge of the cliff, and at last while the breasts of these below were heaving, she returned step by step, until at last amid the shouts of the villagers, she stood at last at the bottom of the cliff with the child on her breast. Between that woman and that babe there was a strong tie; for she was the mother of the babe. And the child owed its safety to the fact that it was living in the love of the mother. And now like this we are in the love of God."In him we live and move and have our being." (2 Peter 1:3-10).

3. Putting forth compassionate effort for the salvation of the lost. He uses a striking and strong figure here: "pulling them out of the fire." There is first compassion and then effort to encompass their rescue. O that Nazarene everywhere would look with compassion upon a lost world and lend every effort to get the gospel of Jesus Christ to them. This is the only hope for the lost. And then our own spiritual growth and development is dependent upon our being busy for the Master. The Idle Christian is always in trouble. Dr. George W. Truett has said, "The biggest sociological problem in this country, in the entire social order, is the problem of idleness. Out there in the realm of business, in the realm of government, the idler is the menacing problem. And in the realm of religion idleness is one of our most pressing problems." If you have lost your spiritual desire perhaps your intoxication for God and His cause has had something to do with it.

4. "Looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." Paul had the same thought in mind when he wrote to Titus saying, "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Lord Jesus Christ." This glorious doctrine of the Lord's coming is one of the greatest incentives to holy living. When the Lord descends, "from heaven with a shout with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God," we want to be ready. Yes, thank God, He is coming again! He came once to die upon the cross and provide a remedy for salvation but He is coming the second time with majesty, glory, and power, to receive us unto Himself. He is the bridegroom of our hearts, "the lily of the valley, the brightness and the morning star." We have read the story of a young couple who were married during the World War that illustrates our position, "It was a strange marriage with more of tears than smiles. Immediately at the close of the ceremony and while congratulations were still being extended, a military officer entered the room, and laying his hand on the shoulder of the bridegroom, spoke a few words to him. The young husband turned, to his bride and bowed her again, and then turning to his father said, "Take care of her, Dad, till I come back." Then to his bride he said, "Never mind, dear, we will have our honeymoon when the war is over and I come back." Thank God, the Bridegroom of our hearts is coming back again and then we will have our honeymoon.

And now after Jude has pointed out these four helps to "living in the love of God" he stands with uplifted hands to give us parting blessing and benediction and we hear him saying, "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen."
GLEANINGS FROM GUIDE TO HOLINESS, 1869

John Wesley as a Preacher

Wesley devotes himself wholly to God and His work. He earnestly and zealously opposes them. He is driven from one city to another, but he preaches to the multitudes in the streets and the fields. He takes for his motto, "Holiness to the Lord," and he knows that the world is his parish, and that it is his sole business to spread spiritual holiness over all hands. He is ridiculous, decide, caricatured, mocked and mobbed; but he preaches in his sublime career.

A scholar with a scholar's love for books and study, he spends the greater part of his life in the saddle and in active duties. With a passionate love for art, especially music and architecture, he turns from his world charms to the gospel trumpet, and calls sinners to repentance. With a keen relish for the enjoyment of home and domestic quiet, he becomes the wide world's inhabitant for the sake of souls. With an intense hungering for the sweets of human love, he rises above disappointment which would have crushed an ordinary man, forgets his "in bleeding heart"—his own words—and passes not in his generous boil to alleviate the condition and brighten the future for his fellow-men. Wandering over the splendid grounds of an English nobleman he said, "I too have a relish for these things; but there is another world," and inspired by the vision of his faith, he falters not in the prosecution of his great life-work. He seeks the poor, the abandoned, the outcasts, the wretched miners underground, and the drunken in the vilest haunts of thickly populated cities. He is a true gospel reformer. He denounces himself and lives for Jesus. Thousand rise up to call him blessed. The moral waste which he waters and cultivates buds and blossoms as the rose.

And when at length close, he is gathered to his fathers, having retained with joyous confidence that all his cares had helped the progress of his race, and shouting triumphantly, "The best of all is, God is with us," he falls amid the tears of thousands who mourn the departure of one who has been to them a father in the gospel, and is welcomed to his heavenly home with the hallojahs of thousands saved through his instrumentality, and gone before him to the immortal shore. Had Wesley chosen the satisfactory portion?

John Wesley as a Preacher

The Apostle Paul's Salary

Hunger, thirst, fasting, nakedness, peril, persecution, stripes, death. Very much like the salaries of some preachers nowadays; only Paul received more.

The rays of the sun shine upon the dust and the mud; but they are not soiled by them. So a holy soul, while it remains holy, may mingle with the vileness of the world, and yet be pure in itself.

Our advancement in the Christian life may be dependent upon one thing: viz., whether God, or are willing to resign radically, directed by Him.

Obedience

The obedience whereby we are purified and the Cymbaliter is received is that of the heart (Rom. 6:17). Some whose outward obedience seems to be faultless have not yet been sanctified wholly, for the heart's desires, affections and will have not been fully harmonized with His law of love; and some who have not yet had outward opportunity to take up active service, when once the call has been received in their hearts a complete compliance with His will; and it being accepted according to what they have and what they have not, the blessed Holy Spirit has fully cleansed and entered their hearts.

Facts and Figures

By E. J. Fleming

The population of the United States has increased by per cent in the last 30 years. The number of young people attending high school has increased by per cent. The number attending college has increased by per cent. The Watchman and Examiner.

The world's unemployed doubles that of a year ago, now totaling 20,000,000.

It is interesting to note that in 1905 the Southern Methodist Episcopal church had 400,000 more in Bible schools than did the Baptists. In 1925, twenty years later, the Baptists had 400,000 more than the Methodists. In 1931 the Baptists claim 600,000 more in Sunday schools than the Methodists have.

Reports from fifteen District Assemblies held this year indicate an increase in the Church of the Nazarene Sunday schools of 8,756. At this ratio our Sunday schools should easily go over the 200,000 mark before the General Assembly convenes next June.

The number of missionaries sent out by the leading denominations is as follows: Presbyterians, 1,224; Latter Day Saints, 836; Methodist Episcopal, 822; Congregational, 615; Roman Catholic, 541; Baptist, 531; Protestant Episcopal, 214; Disciples of Christ, 215. Forty-two American denominations send 7,009 workers to 88 countries. The Congregationalists stand tenth in membership and fourth in the number of missionaries sent out.

The population of Japan is 67,045,517. The scholastic census shows 15 per cent, or 9,317,517 children are in school. Only 9.26 per cent of the children in the Philippines are in school, and Burma, with a population of 13,721,000, has only 675,562 children in its schools, or 5.1 per cent. It is said that French Indo-China has only per cent of its children in school.

The Salvation Army bill recently passed by the House of Commons in London provides that the general of the army shall be elected by the High Council and that the property of the army in Great Britain involves a change in the charter desired by most of the members of the Salvation Army, but which could only be effected by an act of the English Legislature. Under the old charter it was possible for the general to make a secret appointment of his successor—The Globe Review.

For many years deaths have exceeded births in France, up to 1930. In that year the table turned and there were 100,000 more births than deaths. In the year preceding there were 12,000 more deaths than there were births. The number of births in 1930 was 748,911—The Globe Review.
