MY LIFE AND THE STORY OF THE GOSPEL HYMNS

By Ira D. Sankey

A book of 363 pages which has sold at a much higher price. This reprint edition is offered at $1.00. The volume opens with a brief autobiography of Ira D. Sankey, which is full of human interest and inspiration. Following this there are brief stories of several hundred of the most popular Gospel hymns which have been sung around the world, many of which are still in constant use. It seems that every minister and Christian worker would want this book at such an unusual reduction in price. (Yes, we pay the postage.)

SERMON PREPARATION

THERE are several distinct advantages in speaking over the radio. Perhaps the greatest benefit the preacher gains is that he must make detailed preparation of his message so he will know just what he is going to say, and how he will say it in the length of time which he has to speak. One cannot trust to the inspiration of the moment when talking into that microphone, for there is little or no inspiration gathered from the unseen audience. This leads us to wonder if we preachers could not do better work and preach better sermons if we would be as conscientious in our preparation for our pulpit messages as we are for radio sermons.

Too often the preacher has been pressed with the details of pastoral duties until he finds himself up to the last hours of the week without having made the necessary sermon preparation. The pressure of the immediate has caused him to push off the preparation for the most important phase of a pastor's life. There is no excuse in the minds of a congregation for a sermon poorly prepared. And in this day there is more necessity for careful and detailed preparation than perhaps there has ever been. Many of our congregations have the privilege of listening to the best preachers over the radio, they observe the carefulness of their sermon preparation and delivery, they consciously or unconsciously are making comparisons between the radio preacher and the pastor to which they must listen from their pulpit. The pastor suffers by this comparison unless he is giving his best into his sermon preparation and delivery.

A group were discussing a Nazarene pastor just the other day. He is one of the finest men one could desire to meet, he has a pleasing manner and personality, he graces the pulpit well, his scholastic preparation is above the average and for every natural cause he should be an outstanding success. This group were making a friendly criticism of his preaching. One said that he was not careful enough in his pronunciation, and that his use of English was not as well as he knew. Another said he impressed him that he never really put his best into the delivery of his message, that there was too much reserve in his personality and heart that was not being used. Another said his impression was that he trusted too much to his scholastic training and did not make careful preparation of the sermons he preached, or he trusted too much to the inspiration of the moment to put his message over. They all admired him as a man, loved him as a brother, and respected him as a religious leader; but they wished that he would give more careful preparation to the most vital and important work as a minister, his preaching. His friends cannot, tell him of these failings, he is not approachable. He will never be the preacher and blessing he might be just because he does not give himself to the “work of the ministry” in careful preparation and conscientious study.

HAVE THOU AUTHORITY

Recently it was our privilege to attend the ordination service in a sister denomination in which a class of fine young men were set apart to the ministry. As the presiding officer set these individuals apart to this sacred work he used several times these words, “Have thou authority.” These words stayed with me. The true preacher of God has some authority. He is not to be considered as the servant or hireling of the church. Of what does this authority consist?

The primary authority of the preacher is to be a proclaimer of an authoritative message; a preacher of a positive gospel. He is much the same as the prophet of old—the herald of God in proclaiming God’s message to the congregation. There must be nothing uncertain, skeptical or doubtful about this message. His authority is to proclaim the standards of God’s law for all men and to denounce sin wherever it is found. He is not to be a regulator of the individual conscience; he gives forth with authority the message of God and the Holy Spirit brings this message as light to the individual. He has authority as shepherd over the flock, to defend them against false doctrines, to denounce false prophets, to feed them with such rich spiritual food that they will be content with the pastures provided by the shepherd.

His authority includes, exhorting the unruly and rebuking those who will not follow the Christian standards for life. What skill such authority demands. How much of the spirit and disposition of the Christ the preacher needs. What tenderness of heart and sympathy are required to carry such authority. It seems that along with “Have thou authority,” we urge preachers to “Walk thou humbly with thy God.” Only then can they be fitted to assume such authority.—D. S. C.

Dr. Forsyth reminds us that the preacher need not strive to be new, but he must seek to be fresh. He need not seek for discoveries of the gospel. Rather he must look for discoveries in the gospel. Over against the fear of the common place from which many preachers suffer is the fear of continual novelty which breeds shallowness and kills devotion.
5. Distress of God.

This was the trouble with the Israelites—the lack of God. They sent spies to see if God had told the truth. They listened to the majority, and said God’s words did not mean anything. How many dying Israelites after receiving their dying message: “If you ever get to the border again, go in, and do not wait as we did.”

So now, some may say, “I do not know what God will do.” But “Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out,” Christ said. Another may say, “I am not sure I can hold out.” But Jude says that He is “able to keep you from stumbling.” Someone may say, “Perhaps there is no mercy for me.” But David was restored after his great sin, and Jesus forgave Peter after he had denied and denied Him. Jesus cast the devils out of Mary; forgave the thief on the cross; and forgave Saul who was persecuting the Christians.

6. Praise.

The Israelites waited one day too long. They were punished till a more convenient time that never came. At the Oakland Congress in 1903, I felt led during the last sermon to say, “Ten million years from now, someone will remember the words I am saying.” There were four young people who got up and left just at the close of the service, without accepting Christ. They got into their carriage and drove toward the city. But because of careless driving, the carriage struck a stump and the horses ran away injuring all of them. One girl’s skull was crushed, and she did not have another conscious moment and opportunity to find the Lord fifteen minutes after I had made that statement. The next day as I left the city two doctors were standing over her, but she never regained consciousness.

L. Milton Williams during a street meeting at McAlister, Oklahoma, felt impressed to say, “Somebody is getting his last call tonight.” A young man behind him got mad and cursed him. He left and went into a saloon. Someone came to Williams the next morning, and said, “Did you hear about that young man that got mad last night? He is dead in that saloon across the street.” He had had his last call.

III. Notice the varying circumstances.

In this hall there are seven hundred praying hearts pleading for you. God’s pillar of cloud led you to this place—because He wants to lead you in. There are hundreds of Caleb and Joshua here who can testify that they have testified God’s promises and found them to be true. They came—barbarians, gamblers, profiteers, profane, impure and untrue—and Jesus pardoned them. They came again for a clean heart, and Jesus led them into the land of rest. His blood cleansed them from all sin. The fierce appetites and passions and propensities left. They have feasted on the old corn and wine, milk and honey, and Israel thrived. They have breathed life and air, and drunk of the upper and nether springs.

Jesus is here to baptize you with the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is here with His cleansing fire to consume the pride and passion of your heart; to burn out the canker and corruption of your nature; to destroy the fierce appetites and unruly temper and unholy lust.

At the first convention I ever held in England, about the second day John Thatcher of Perth, Scotland, came to the platform and astonished me by quoting a long passage from one of my sermons. He said, “I was a soldier in the Boer War in South Africa, I was the worst of them when I had them. I pumed them, but I kept on till the war was over. Then I got saved and sanctified, and God has taken my appetite away.”

And John Thatcher was an earnest Christian and an intense worker in that convention.

Gilbert Baker attended my meetings at Somerville, Massachusetts, seldom missing a service. Often he lingered about with a hungry heart at the close of the meeting. A Christian worker often spoke personally to him about his soul. One night, under deep conviction, he was urged to go to the altar. He turned to a companion and said, “I’ll get you to go.” The friend answered, “I will not go, but you can go without me.” He did not yield to his convictions and his comrade soon laughed him out of his seriousness. He went once more to church. The wilted urged him to come and he refused. He was run over by a street car on the way home and multilated and mangled beyond recognition. He was only 23 years old, and went to hell from fear of his companions.

My pupil, Brother Shelton, was holding a revival in Kelterson, Iowa. A man of middle age attended the meetings and rejected Christ. Soon after he sickened and died. He lingered three weeks in awful agony, and cried out, “I’ve missed it and I am lost at last.” A neighbor went in to watch him, and could endure it but one hour. He said, “I have seen all the hell I ever want to see.” Then the harvest passed. He came to Kadelg and refused to go in.

Mr. Newell, the famous Bible teacher under Dr. Torrey in Chicago, told Rev. Fink of Colorado Springs that God had laid him on the shelf and set him aside because he had trimmed the truth to please men on the subject of sanctification. He told Rev. Dr. Worrall (who told Fink) that he was leading other people into the kingdom of God, while he himself was on the road to hell, because he had rejected the great truth of sanctification to please men! Why? He came to Kadelg and would not enter in. Tell me, will you, that men can sport with this mighty doctrine of sanctification?

Drummond, of Glasgow University, said. "The department of the sacred art, the art by which the believer rejects the tender of holiness. He thus turns away from God to face the perils of moral deterioration. It means moral suicide and antemortem damnation."

At a convention here at Star Hall, Manchester, England, a doctor came to this altar and knelt right over there. The worker who dealt with him is now sitting on this platform. He pleaded with him to pay the price and get the blessing. But he refused to do it. He left the meeting, went to another city, and in a hotel committed suicide. O do not fail to hear God’s loving call, but enter in today.

At the only occasion I ever preached this sermon (Easter Sunday Evening, 1913) one hundred and fifty prayers through at the altar and found God.
distress. Death shall reign on every hand. All around shall the dead bodies lie. There shall be no time for proper burial. Out into the streets they will be cast. The living as well as the dead shall be silent, too overcome with grief and awed by the gruesome sight to utter a word.

"Wide o'er misfortune's surgeing tide.\nBilhers succeeding bilhers spread;\nShadows, its fomites spread.\nAnother lifts its baldrouned head."

Among the causes for such devastation in the land the most outstanding fact is the treatment of the poor. The mercantile are the most active in this respect. To these Amos addresses himself, acclamation, "Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail. In their avoite and greed they not only sought to rob the poor, but they had as their ultimate goal "to make an end of them as free men and property holders." While on sacred days such as the new moon, and the Sabbath, they could not follow their dishonest pursuits, "in such times they rose up and the hours would pass by and the day would be over that they might again sell corn with their scant measures and heavy shingles, at the same time falsifying with the scales. By such transactions they would finally bring the poor to a place where they would not be able to meet their obligations and consequently would have to sell themselves into slavery. Not only in their dealings did they give short measure and cheat in weights, but they sold the chaff of the wheat, mixing it with the grain.

Such dishonesty and covetousness would not be unheeded. The wrath of Jehovah was aroused and the word of judgment uttered. "The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works. Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn that dwelleth therein?" The Lord will visit them with an earthquake; there shall be convulsions of the earth; it shall be like a swelling flood which rises and falls. Not only to but there shall be darkness in the heavens above, even at noonday. All their feasts in which they took so much delight shall be scenes of mourning. Their songs of revelry shall become songs of lamentation, yes their grief shall be exceedingly bitter as when one mourns for an only son.

"God gave us over beasts, fish, fowl,\nDominion absolute; that right we hold\nBy his donation; but man over man.\nHe made not lord, such title to himself\nReserving human left for human free."

In these hours of distress in their anguish of spirit they will seek unto the Lord, but there will be no answer. They have failed to heed the words of the prophets; the time would come when they shall be exceeding drowsy that a prophet might speak unto them, but there shall be no voice. In their greediness to obtain some measure from above through a commissioned agent they will wander about, literally reel in their sorrowful plight like a drunken man, going from "sea to sea," that is from the eastern border to the western and also from north to south; they shall in their intense desire run to and fro. But all shall be in vain. The word of God has been withdrawn. On other occasions in Israel when the people had sinned and transgressed against the Lord, His word had been withdrawn; such was the case in the days of Eli. We read, "And the word was precious in those days, there was no open vision." Again King Saul found himself where whom he inquired of the Lord, "He answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets." Later on in the time of Ezekiel the prophecy was uttered, "Destruction shall come upon destruction, and rumor shall be upon rumor, and they shall seek a vision from the prophet, and the law shall perish from the priest and counsel from the ancients.

In these days of darkness and doom, not only shall the old be overcome, but the young, the virgins and the young men, shall lose their courage and faint. If the buoyancy of youth is not able to withstand the sufferings shall others endure?

While the outstanding cause for all of this misery was the treatment of the poor, the injustices meted out, yet there lie as the underlying reason for that and all other transgressions of which Israel had been guilty the fact that in the very beginning of their history they had forsaken God. Instead of uttering their oaths of preservation in the name of the Lord God of heaven, they swore by the sin of Samaria and by the god of Dan. They regarded him as idol gods and the worship of Beersheba. Herein they did despite to the God of heaven. Thus Amos arraigns the senseless and profane worship that prevailed in the land.

In this sermon to Israel we find the two outstanding sins of the northern kingdom once again denounced. The compassion for the poor had been effaced from their hearts and only oppression remained, and they had forsaken the God of Israel for the calf worship of Dan and Bethel. These recurrent themes that have been reiterated so frequently through the book are now emphasized for the last time. As for the worship of the people, G. A. Smith, says, "Perhaps this is the most effective contrast in which Amos has yet placed the stupid ritualism of his people. With so many things to swear by; with so many holy places that once were the homes of vision, Abraham's Beerheba, Jacob's Beithel, Joshua's Gifnal—nay, a whole land over which God's voice had broken in past ages, lavish as the rain; with, too, all their asiduity of sacrifice and prayer, they should nevertheless starve and pant for that living word of the Lord, which they had silenced in His prophet."

In the denunciation of these two evils existing in the kingdom, we have significant lessons for each one of us. First there is to be noted God's love for the poor. This is ever present in Scripture. It is evident in the early legislation given by Moses which contains many provisions for the poor, and it is found in other scriptures, especially in the Psalms. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble" (Ps. 41:11). Then there is the lesson that religious zeal and worship without a genuine heart experience are of no avail. Thus, men may be devoted to religion, may be loyal to their sacred traditions and institutions, may haunt the holy associations of the past and be very assiduous with their ritual—and yet, because of their worldliness, pride and disobedience, never feel that, moral upbuilding, that clear call to duty, that comfort in pain, that hope in adversity, that good conscience at all times, which spring up in the heart like living water."—G. A. Smith.

"No such service the benignant Father\nRequired at his earthly children's hands:\nNot the poor offering of vain rites, but rather\nThe simple duty man from man demands!"

—Whittier.

In seeking for texts and sermon material, one is found in verse 2, "The end is come upon my people Israel, I will not again pass by them any more." As a theme we might give, "The crisis in rejection of religious truth." We could develop this by noting the causes for such a crisis, the nature of the crisis and the resultant effect. Another text may be found in vs. 11, 12, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord: and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it." A possible theme might be: "The doom of those who fail to hear."

Then as divisions, we might develop along such lines as these; the time will come when they will earnestly desire the Word of the Lord, in this intentsly they will seek in every way for some day when all will be in vain. In connection with these same verses, we will give Wolfendale's outline: "The Word of God is the true nourishment of man, contempt of the Word of God may bring famine of the Word, a famine of the Word is the sorest judgment upon any nation.

The New Ten Commandments
According to Modern Paganism

Charles Daniel Brodhead contributes his ideas of the Ten Commandments of Modern Paganism in the Christian Advocate.

Modern paganism laughs at the old Decalogue as outworn and outgrown, and has substituted these as its new Ten Commandments:

1. Thou shalt have as many gods as thou desirest.
2. Thou shalt not think of God in any traditional way but only according to the latest fad and fashion.
3. Thou shalt not be careful with thy tongue when thou speakest the name of Deity or usest vulgar speech.
4. Remember every Sunday not to keep it holy, but to use it wholly as a day of selfish pleasure and religious vacation.
5. Keep no filial obligations to thy father or thy mother, but look to them for food, and house and cash. Speak often of them as "old logies."
6. Thou shalt not destroy war.
7. Thou shalt not maintain any old-fashioned sex distinctions and standards nor conventional safeguards of morality and self-respect and honor, nor keep as binding the easily plotted wedding vows.
8. Thou shalt not steal, if the amount is too small, nor if thou cannot get away with it.
9. Thou shalt not withhold thy tongue from poisonous gossip, nor clever alibis at the expense of thy neighbor.
10. Thou shalt not be outdone by thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not be outdone by thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his hobbies, nor his car, nor anything—irrespective of its price or thine own ability—anything that is thy neighbor's.

Preaching Not All

Each preacher should aim to be a teacher as well as a preacher. Jesus went about teaching and healing only. Teaching and healing are not as common as it ought to be. Most congregations are about preaching to death; but they are not over-tired, and the teaching isImprovement. Teaching includes scriptural exposition. The unfolding of the truth, the illumination of the divine Word. Making the Word plain, also rich in interpretation. To teach, "rightly dividing the Word of Truth," will greatly add to the ministry, and enrich the spiritual vision, and make the gospel very attractive. The people will usually go where there is illuminative teaching. Every young preacher especially should aim to be a field, scriptural teacher.

Dogs, Evil Workers, Conscience

The apostle warns the Philippians against these three dangers. "Dogs," referring to profane and unclean persons. The term is used often, but according to Alford, in Jewish usage uncleanness was the prominent idea.

"Evil workers," perhaps a better rendering, evil doers, or Justizianes who endeavored to pervert the gospel (there are many such in this day), evil workmen, perverting the Word and bringing it into disrepute. How gracious to be able to give a clear, and correct interpretation of the Word.

"Contamination," meaning a cutting off, excision. Meyer says, "The word is used by the apostle to degrade the pretensions which the Jews made to sanctify by the cutting in of their flesh. Circumcision was the sign of a covenant; but under the new covenant, their outward circumcision was rendered unnecessary. (A bitter paranomasia, playing upon a word) because these men were circumcised merely as regards the body, and placed their confidence in this fleshly circumcision, but were wanting in the inner, spiritual circumcision which that of the body typified."

Look in the Church

If there is life in the church—and there seems to be—there is spiritual, not educational, nor financial. The church is supposed to be a spiritual institution, an institution that makes a specialty of the Christian religion. The Christian religion is a spiritual religion, demonstrable, certain. When the church lacks in spirituality, she lacks in the fundamental for which she was raised up. There is no substitute; learning, church architecture, wealth, culture, refinement, nor entertainment will take the place of spirituality. What the world needs is Christianity, for Christianity is a religion that can be applied to the individual, the educational life, the schools and colleges, business and pleasure. It fits in everywhere. It never fails when given a fair test.

My Father's World

Dr. Malvib Babcock has beautifully written:

"This is my Father's world,
The hills his carols raise,
The morning light, the lily white,
Decline their Maker's praise.
This is my Father's world,
He shines in all that's fair;
In the rushing grass I hear Him pass,
He speaks to me everywhere."

More and Better Reading

The Presbyterian Advance has the following:

In the midst of warnings against salacious literature it is heartening to be told that Americans are reading more books and better books than ever before. The stereotyped phrase "the six best sellers" has become obsolete. Today, the list contains about thirty best selling books. Nonfiction has advanced to claim its place in the foreground.

Alfred Harcourt, the publisher, ascribes the growth to several reasons and conditions. One of them is that libraries and schools have undergone a remarkable development, with a corresponding encouraging influence upon reading and literature.

"Books once confined to clergymen and professors now are universally possessed," he said.

A Preacher

Should study to read the Bible intelligently.
Should recognize the poor and treat them as well as the rich.
Should not take sides in a controversy and thus a church issue.
Should occupy his own pulpit as often as possible and never give his church over to a mere entertainment.
Should keep an "open house" for strangers and friends, always prompt to respond to a call, and glad to minister in every way possible.

Should cultivate the acquaintance of business men of the community, invite them to the church and then be sure and recognize them when they come.

Less We Forget

The discussion of Prohibition has so largely shifted from the old insistence on the evils of alcohol to the emphasis on law enforcement, that there is great need for renewed and effective education on the effects of alcohol.

Dr. Haven Emmerson, former Health Commissioner of New York City, a medical authority of high standing, in the Survey for May, 1925, offered for the benefit of those who may temporarily lose their bearings in the whirlpool of today's confusion the following compact review of what alcohol is and does.

Alcohol is a depressant, habit-forming narcotic drug.
Alcohol is a protoplasmic poison.
Alcohol is drunk to get the drug effect, and whenever it is so taken in whatever amount it exerts to some degree its depressant and toxic effects.
Alcohol causes disease; psychoses, multiple neuritides, gastrilis, cirrhosis of the liver.
Alcohol causes deaths from acute and chronic poisoning.
Alcohol reduces resistance in infection.
Alcohol diminishes likelihood of recovery from acute infections, such as pneumonia.
Alcohol increases liability to accidents and delays recovery.
Alcohol reduces endurance, accuracy, and rapidity of muscular action of all kinds, even when used in such small amounts as to show effects appreciable subjectively to the user.
Alcohol decreases expectation of life.
Alcohol reduces chance and survival of offspring.
Alcohol deteriorates emotional and nervous control, as expressed in unreliable judgment and self-control, and hence contributes to the incidence of venereal diseases.

No kind of test involving conscious cerebration or manual or voluntary musculature mechanism has yet been evolved which does not show one or all of the following results from even minimal physiological doses of alcohol, as compared with the responses of a normal or non-alcoholized individual—delay, inaccuracy, lack of endurance, i.e., slower, weaker, more irregular, response.—Luccock.

A Sevenfold Rule of Life
From the Church News of Saint Anselma's Church, Melbourne, Australia.
1. To pray daily the Lord's prayer.
2. To observe rightly the Lord's day.
3. To attend, at least weekly, the Lord's service.
4. To read daily the Lord's work.
5. To share in some way the Lord's cross.
6. To give weekly for the Lord's work.
7. To be one of the Lord's witnesses.

Infinity in a Seed
Edgar A. Guest the versatile poet, recently went into a store and bought tens of cents worth of seed. As he left the store it flashed through his mind that what looked to the clerk like a dime really represented the purchase of a miracle! So he gave a lecture to himself:

You've a dime's worth of power which no man can create, you've a dime's worth of life in your hand; you've a dime's worth of mystery, destiny, fate which the wisest cannot understand.

In this bright little package, now isn't it odd? You've a dime's worth of something known only to God.

These are seeds, but the plants and the blossoms are here, with their petals of various hues; in their little petals to day and to-morrow, there's power which no chemical can fuse; here is one of God's miracles soon to unfold! Thus for ten cents an ounce is divinity sold.

Wanted—A Few Mystics
Dr. Luccock in the Christian Advocate says,

At one time more than a century ago, when there were only a few students in Harvard Divinity School, an old minister reported that on visiting the school he found only three seniors, 'one a mystic, one a skeptic, and one a dyspeptic.' Thank God for one mystic at any rate! We have with us today a number of skeptics and quite a few dyspeptics. Let us pray that the line of mystics may never wholly die out.

Twenty-three Miles Away
Dr. Luccock relates another: "Mme. Adelina Patti, in giving the location of her Welsh castle in the district of Brecknockshire, always said that it was twenty-three miles from everywhere and very beautiful.' The description fits rather exactly a good many sermons. They are very often beautiful and a long way from everywhere. A sermon ought not to be more than a mile away from a place where people live and move and have their troubles.

Can We Be Modest with Our Church Advertising
The popular church must advertise or be left in a hole. There must be all kinds of advertising, big display ads, sensational lines, cuts, etc. Some of these ads are truthful and some are not. It seems that some thoughtful person, with care and truthfulness ought to censor the advertising and keep it within bounds. A church ought not to lie or be off color in anything. I presume that it is all right to set the preacher's name in BIG DISPLAY type. We know one great church that modestly advertises; the pastor's name is set in very small type, about the smallest in the ad. Not so with many. Modesty is becoming in any individual or church. The meek and lowly Jesus was modest and very humble. The church should imitate Him.

Slogans
Church slogans are numerous and multiplying. The "church with the open door," the "church with the open hand," the "church with the warm heart," and many others. On the bulletin it says, "You will never be a stranger but once." And yet many strangers go in and out without a greeting. Then the big red cross or some other color down and a beautiful cross comes into view where prayer is being uttered. The brass band and orchestra, all in the round. The church, the service, the presence, the imitation of Christ. And the house is open.

The Preacher's Magazine
whistling and everything unspiritual and sensational. Here is an actual description. "Let's try No. 8. No. 8 in the red book. Everybody sing. 'Brighten the corner.'"

"We sang two verses. Then the leader stopped to tell about Pat, whose favorite song was 'Fight in the corner where you are.' Then another verse. Then all the men whistled a verse. Then the women hummed one. Then the men whistled while the women sang. Then we sang the last verse over again, everybody except the unmarried ladies over sixty-five years of age being forced to sing (laughter). Then everybody shook hands and everybody say Amen! Say Hallelujah! The band will play 'Way Down on the Swann River.' We will now take the offering. And not a few churches think they have to go through this theatrical performance to get the crowd. Is this kind of thing approved by God? We aver not.

Performers
The loving, holy, humble Jesus uttered some scathing things about the "performers." He said: "Many [note that word many] shall say unto me in that day [the judgment day], Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied [preached] in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

One may have a great name, build great churches, deliver eloquent lectures, be worshiped by multitudes and yet not have the approval of Jesus. My brother, beware!

Sparks for Preachers
The preacher is the embodied conscience of his congregation. All sermons are bread, but some have more crust than others. Preaching without preparation is merely a form of deep breathing.

The preacher is an octopod, translating light rays into sound vibrations. A preacher of all men should be at his best in his "roaring forties." Some congregations are distant after the benediction, but close during the offering. The congregation who merely receive the sermon and place it in file. It is a great day for the church when both the congregation and the minister are 'all there.' As the minister looks out over his congregation, he loves to think that God is using him as a pen to write out lives.

If the preacher is not gifted, remember that you can bring a large torch to a small taper and carry away a candle. A. Holmes in the Christian Advocate, New York."

Are Smoking Women Entitled to Respect?
The Shield relays the following: Two young men in Chicago accosted two girls on the street at night, and were arrested for the offense. In their defense they said of the girls, "They were smoking on the street, so we naturally concluded they wouldn't object to a flattery." They each paid a fine of $10, but in doing so, declared they still held their original opinion of girls who smoke.

A reader of the Los Angeles Times writes that paper, "It seems that women with all their boasted intuition would realize that in spring men's habits they are losing men's reverence and respect.

The Rural-New Yorker says that smoking women are responsible for at least part of the loss of respect which many city men now manifest toward women.

A reader of the Chicago Daily News—a young man, he declares himself to be the man who has found, by compiling statistics, that "ninety-seven out of every one hundred men would never marry girls that smoke," and adds, "Girls, if you want a man with good moral character to be your husband, don't smoke).

H. W. Casler of the New York Telephone Company, discussing the subject of feminine users of tobacco, says, "Personally, I have very little respect for the woman who smokes."

Although the Prince of Wales has been a heavy smoker, he evidently doesn't think much of women smokers. Here is what he said when asked what he thought of the modern girl, "If you mean the close-cropped, cigarette-smoking, mannishly dressed, noisy girl, I must confess that the modern girl does not appeal to me in the slightest."

The Value of a Sparrow car number 12,270. They gave their reason.

When car No. 12,270 left the repair tracks at Muskegon, after a period of enforced inactivity, and the "bad order" chalk-mark was removed from its side door, Night Watchman Patrick Hawkins told Conductor Stark of train No. 81 that he wished the car, could have remained a little longer in the yard, for a sparrow had built a nest in the car, and had a family of little birds within it.

Conductor Stark had no discretion in the matter, and cars were in demand; so the car was hauled to Fremont.

When train No. 81 arrived at Fremont, the mother bird was found, hiding on the top of it. Sometimes flying above it, and sometimes riding upon the car, the sparrow followed to White Cloud, where the car became a part of train No. 101. But Conductor Stark told Conductor Battema about the bird; and as Big Rapids, where the car was dropped, Conductor Battema left word with the trainmen and switchmen about the sparrow.

Conductor Burritt hauled the car back to White Cloud, leaving the door open a little so that the sparrow could get in to her nest.

By the time the car returned to White Cloud half the men on the railroad knew about it, and Conductor Willoughby, who hailed the car to Baldwin in train No. 210, was on the lookout for it; and so was Conductor Hess, who brought the car to Saginaw in train No. 56. Every conductor on the line by this time knew the number of car 12,270, and a report of the freight it carried.

There was not a man in the employ of the railroad who would have touched the mother bird or one of the little ones. Still, it was a perilous life for the little mother and the young, for the mother never flew away for a worm with any certainty of finding her nest where she left it.

And so five railway conductors, Stark, Battema, Burritt, Willoughby and Hess, joined in a written report concerning the car and the family it contained, and requested that the car be side-tracked until the little birds were old enough to fly.

Trainmaster Murray consulted the officers of the road, and issued an order that car No. 12,270 was not to be moved or molested until further orders. That order held good till the young birds took their flight.

"Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father?"

Surely it is because men have in them some little of the love of the Father that they show kindness to His creatures.

Text: As ye are in heaven so be ye upon earth (Prov. 23:7).

Life has long been recognized that it is not food, or clothes, or heredity, or social position that makes a man in the true sense; but rather—

1. Original Thinking—touching the deeper soul-life as well as the surface of consciousness. We are in the age of "sub-conscious psychology" (Dr. O. W. Holmes said that everyone personality is really theoreifal; and true thinking involves all; Jesus' mission likewise touches all three. The prodigal "come to himself," when he began to think.

II. SYMMETRICAL THINKING. We all think, but in familiar grooves. These days of specialization develop the habit of "talking shop." We need the broadness of divine thought. Man was "created a little lower than the angels" with heavenly capacity of soul—if he would but rise to heavenly thinking; or if he would but think of life as God sees it—The Exposer.

True Friends

It takes a great many new friends to make one old friend. Friendship is not like asphalt—such that when the man who ships in a hank and is then ready for the knife. It is rather like the hickory or the oak of gradual growth and solid fiber. As it is the wood which has been "seasoned" by long exposure to wind and weather that emits the hottest fire, so the friendships that have been seasoned by many years of sun and storm produce the warmest glow. An eccentric old man in Loantla hung an auctioneer's red flag over his front door; he said that he did it to "weed out the false friends who would make off if they thought he had come to bankruptcy." A rather sharp stroke of humor was that device; and they are quite too many who are ready to halt their carriages before the door of a fine mansion, but who had very few by-streets and back-lanes on their visiting lists. Prosperity breeds friends; adversity tests them.—Theo. L. Cutler.

The Poverty of Wealth

Eli Hyman, a Hebrew, some years ago beard admission to the general hospital in Toronto, where he soon died. An examination of his clothing resulted in finding in an old handkerchief, scarp worth $17,000. In the lining of his pocket was another scarp to the value of $14,000. Other papers showed that Hyman's income from stock and other transactions was $3,000 last year. In all the estate, it is expected, will value $100,000. For 20 years he had slept in sheds and stables. He sold papers and begged money and food. He hired and a daughter are living it is thought in San Francisco. What an illustration of the folly of telling our affections on earthly things, is seen in this man! And he is, also, a striking illustration of the beggarly way in which many Christians live, who are laden with the rich promises of God! Princes by promise, and paupers by conduct. They do not possess their possessions.—Selected.

Be Filled with the Spirit

Canyon and Howson give the following phrase of this whole passage: "When you meet your enjoyment consist not in fulness of wine, but fulness of the Spirit; let not your songs be the drinking songs of heathen feasts, but psalms and hymns; and their accompaniment not the music of the lyre, but the melody of the heart; while you sing them to the praise of Venus or Bacchus; but of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Dr. J. W. Chapman said, "While in the mountains of Colorado I noticed the miners going into the mine at the height of their 'shifts.' Their hands and faces were clean as they could make them; but at the end of the 'shifts' it would be difficult to tell whether they were by nature black or white, and yet there was one part of the face that was just as clean as when they entered the mine: that was the ball of the eye; and that was not because no impurities had touched it, for the mine was filled with such, because there is a little tear-plate which keeps working all the time, and when the least speck touches the eye it washes it away. We are in the midst of sin and uncleanness in this world, but we may be kept clean every whith if we be filled with the Spirit."—The Illustrator.

All Things are Possible

Says Dr. J. G. Morrison, 'We once saw a great 'Milwaukee' electric locomotive, and asked the mechanic in attendance how much it could pull. His answer was, 'You can't stall it!' Said he, 'Out in the mountains they have dammed up the great streams and over immense turbines which they have generated a mighty current of electricity. This is conveyed to the Milwaukee railroad over a wire the size of a man's wrist. All this engine has to do is to reach up and grasp the wire, and the power of the irresistible mountain streams is imparted to it. Then it can pull anything. You can hitch on, and hitch on, till you break the drawbar, but you can't stall this thing. It will climb any hill and pull any load you can hitch it to;' with a thrilling heart we remembered the words of Scripture: 'We will look unto the hills from whence cometh our help.' We remembered that faith was the wire that brought this omnipotence to our hands. We received this faith, and after the faith, this faith wire Jesus had said: 'And nothing shall be impossible to you! O reader, let us reach up and grasp the heavenly wire! Then let us hitch on! Hitch onto that neighbor's family, and release God upon them! Hitch onto that village and precipitate a revival there!—Hitch onto the county in which you live, the state where your home is, the nation, the mission fields, the world!

Restitution

The morning mail on March 15, 1905, brought to Secretary Shaw of the United States Treasury Department a peculiar package. Upon opening it the officials were surprised to find a pile of United States currency, principally consisting of $10 bills. Upon counting the bills it was found that there were exactly $12,100 in the package. A more remarkable letter accompanied the package. This is how it read: "I am sending you herewith enclosed $12,100, which is to go to the use of the United States government. Years ago I defrauded the government of money, but have returned it all, and now am paying fourfold in accordance with the teaching of the Scriptures. The way of the transgressor is hard, and no one but God knows how I have suffered the consequences, and I would seek to do a bountiful restoration. May God pardon while the United States government is benefited.

A Signed A SINNER"

Private Secretary Edwards would not give the memorandum which the envelope bore, saying that it was the policy of the department never to disclose this, so the history of the man could not be ascertained. That Treasury department would require to be reinforced many fold if all who have defrauded the government would likewise repent and make wrongs right. He was the largest contribution, with one exception, that had ever been received for the "Conscience Fund" of the United States Treasury. Now he can sleep nights and face death. What astonishing exposures there will be at the judgement! What appalling revelations with respect to professedly good and respectable people! "For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid that shall not be known." —Selected.

The Certainty of Judgment

Sir Francis Newton was trained in early life to understand the great truths of the gospel, and while in early manhood it was hoped that he would become an ornament and a blessing to his family and the nation, but his course resulted far otherwise. He fell into company that corrupted his principles and morals. He became an avowed infidel, and a life of dissipation soon brought on a disease that was incurable. When he felt he must die, he threw himself on his bed, and after a brief pause, exclaimed as follows: "Whence this war in my heart? What argument is there now to assist me against matters of fact? Do I assert there is no hell, while I feel one in my bosom? Am I certain there is no retribution, when I feel a present judgment? Do I affirm my soul to be as my body, when this inequality, and that is vigorous as ever? Oh, that anyone would restore unto me that ancient state of purity and innocence! Wretched that I am, whither shall I flee from this breast? What will become of me?"

An infidel "companion tried to dispel his thoughts, to whom he replied, 'That there is a God, I know, because I continually feel the effect of His wrath; that there is a hell, I am equally certain, because I have received an earnest of my inheritance there, already in my breast; that there is a natural conscience, I now feel the assurance and horror, being continually uplifted by it with my iniquities and all my iniquities, and all my sins brought to my remembrance. Why God has marked me out as an example of His vengeance rather than you, or any other one of my acquaintances, I presume it because I have been more rebelliously educated, and done greater mischief than the rest of God's people. Millions of millions of years will bring me no nearer the end of my tortures than one poor hour! Oh, eternity, eternity! Who can discover the abyss of eternity, who can paraphrase these words:

FOREVER AND EVER?"

Lest his friends should think he was insane, he said, 'You may imagine me melancholy or distraught, I wish it were either; but it is part of my judgment that I am not. No, my apprehension of persons and things is more quick and vigorous than when I was in perfect health; and it is my curse, because I am thereby more sensible of the condition I am fallen into. Would you be informed why I am become a skeleton in three or four days? See, now then. I have despised my Maker, and denied my Redeemer. I have joined myself to the atheist and profane, and continued this course under many convictions, till my iniquity was ripe for vengeance, and the just judgment of God overtook me when my security was the greatest, and the checks of my conscience the least."

As his mental distress and bodily disease increased, he was asked if he would have prayer offered in his behalf. He turned his face and exclaimed, "Are ye also become devils to torment me? Would ye give me a prospect of heaven to make my hell more intolerable?" Soon after his voice failed, he uttered a groan of inexpressible horror and cried out, "Oh, the insufferable pains of hell!" and died at once.—Selected.

PRACTICAL

PART III. HINTS TO MINISTERS

By Rev. James Catherin

Compiled by Dr. H. Orton Wiley

1. A Call to Preach

A CALL to preach is frequently just what Jeremiah describes it to be. Although he was tempted to say, "I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name;" yet when he held his peace, he tells us the word of the Lord was in his heart as a burning fire shut up in his bones: "And I was weary with forbearance, and I could not stay" (Jer. 20:9). The following verse shows, that when he ceased to be the messenger against the dam and his children, they would not injure his character and influence: "I heard the defaming of many," says he, "on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiar watching for my halting, saying, pendventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him and shall take our revenge on him." The minister of Christ should ever be the assailant—the invader of the devil's territories. He is always the safest in a revival of religion. This is his proper sphere; and if called of God to preach the gospel, in this he will be in his congenital element—more happy in such active warfare than in any other part of his ministerial office.

A call to preach may be burned in the heart, as live embers on the hearth are frequently covered with ashes; there is no flame, nor perhaps scarcely a glow. What is to be done? Clear away the incumbent ashes; stir up the coals; add fuel; and you may have a blaze; a glowing revival!

"Jesus, confirm my heart's desire, To work, and speak, and think, for Thee; Still let me guard the holy fire, And still stir up Thy gift in me."
From this dust heap 5,000 years old they have dug proofs of a quayside of a grand canal that connected with the Persian Gulf by means of great barges. Ur was among the first cities founded in this land, not long after creation, and it grew and flourished after the great flood. The Sumerians, who inhabited it, had the art of writing in picture script, in which a record has been found containing a parallel account of Noah's flood. There are burnt bricks stamped with the name, "Ulu-Nammu."

The author of this article says, "The home of the great Jewish patriarch has hereby been definitely proved to be no literary fiction, but a city that ranked among the great capitals of the past."

So archaeologists are kicking bugaboos to death. Another bugaboo of science that has frightened Christians has been kicked to death by Professor A. S. Edington, the well-known leader in astronomy, of Cambridge University, England. Certain scientists have held it unethical to think of God as having anything to do with the phenomena of nature. If there is a God at all, he seemed far back in the shadows.

But recent discoveries in physics and astronomy make it seem that the study of physics can no longer understate the theory that matter has always been and always will be. It is known that atoms and electrons of matter are continually destroying themselves by "spitting energy" at each other, as one authority puts it. These discoveries affect biology, likewise. Living organisms have hitherto been supposed to obey laws like machines. Biology is now accepting their seeming freedom as a real fact. Dr. Ralph S. Lille, of the Marine Biological Laboratory, says, "It is highly probable that the conditions in living organisms are actually of this type."

Physicists are being driven to admit, contrary to their theories, that all forms of radiation seem to be just as inexplicable in a mechanical way.

"Most astronomers and physicists," says Professor Edington, "are now teaching that radiation from the sun and stars is produced by the actual disintegration of matter. There are no signs of evolution in matter of energy, the twins of science, lying at the base of the scientific conception of the world. The creation of matter, the creation of life, the real creation of the great distinct types of life—are the truth of literal creation in the beginning is conferred by the best and latest discoveries of science."

Dr. Robert Andrews Millikan, winner of a Nobel prize for cracking up the electron, and smashing to bits a theory of the universe, says, "We must all have conceptions that go beyond the field of science, that is, the present range of intellectual knowledge. As soon as we get beyond that range we are in the field of religion, and no one knows better than the scientific worker how soon he gets beyond the known."

It seems to me there are but two possible points of view with respect to this entire question of religion. As for myself, if I were compelled to be a dogmatist, it would be easier for me to be a Fundamentalist than an atheist, for I believe with Voltaire, that if a God did not exist it would be necessary to invent one."

Dr. William Fairfield Osbourne, head of the American Museum of Natural Science is a devout Christian, and has made recent discoveries that compel him to believe, with Professor Clau- son, in a distinct creation of man.

William Bragg, president of the British Society for the Advancement of Science, in his inaugural address last year came out flat-footed for the Christian view of God and creation, in opposition to his predecessor, who had made an atheistic address.

So, if we are patient, and hold fast to all things, proving that which is good, all the bugaboos will be kicked over by scientific men, and God's truth shine out as clear as the sun.

THE PASTOR

By W. G. Schruman

W E HAVE just come from the Chicago Central District Assembly held in Danville during the last week of August. It was interesting to listen to the reports of the pastors. What a crowd of loyal pastors Chicago Central District has, and how tensely they cling to the pastorate. Surely there is something supernatural in the religion of Jesus Christ to make men so devoted to their task year after year with such small remuneration. I wish I could get the ears of the laity for a short season. In fact, I am going to write an article for the Herald of Holiness for the laymen to read. What an opportunity to help a loyal pastor!
I remember years ago when I became pastor at Haverhill, Mass., there were so many demands upon me—perhaps many of them self-imposed, but none the less strenuous, because of that. In looking over my records a few days ago, I was surprised to find that I was out preaching somewhere nearly every night in the year. I left for New Orleans, Mass., Peabody, Mass., Salem, Mass., North Scituate, R. I., Beverly, Mass., Manchester, N. H., Concord, N. H. and Derry, N. H. appears so many times in my records that I wonder how. I found any time to do my work at home, and yet I was present every Tuesday and Thursday night (we had two mid-week meetings) and for 25 years. Frequently we did not get carfare—did not ask for it—never thought of getting it, and while the church paid me a fair salary, sailing on the financial sea was none too easy. It never dawned on the good people to give us a donation. We had left a comfortable parsonage in Lynn, and in the fall of the year brought our family to the Grand View Park Campmeeting, which was nothing but a summer building, and, shivered and shook on the frosty mornings when we arose to begin our pastoral duties for the day. One good woman, Mrs. C.—just hinted to the people that they ought to make a donation. Or what they call in the Middle West a “Pound Party,” but I declare it was more like a “ton” party. The first thing that rolled off the wagon was a barrel of flour, and then there was a bushel of potatoes, butter, sugar, eggs, and everything to make the heart of a man glad, who was trying to pay his bills and keep out of debt and yet continue the arduous labors of a city pastor. My! but we felt glad about the situation. Mrs. C.—was not a shouter, nor did she ever run around the church, and she was not much of a woman to testify, though when she did testify, she made you feel that God had really done something for her in days gone by. I think she was saved and sanctified under the holy ministry of Isaac W. Hanson, but when it came to prac- tice, she did it more words than a dozen shouts. I think she is still living. Her lot was not easy. She had very, very many discouraging things in her life, but she was always mindful of the comforts of the preacher, no matter who he was. She was an elderly lady, had considerable influence with the church people, and just a hint from her turned the trick.

How many of the good laymen of the churches today could help the pastor of a small salary by giving him a donation once or twice a year. People like to do it. Just let somebody hint at it, and they are ready to do their part. I heard the reports of pastors who said they had received $500 or $600 for their year's work, and the beautiful part of it is that many of them de- nied that the church world, and they went and praised God for the privilege of being a preacher. Yet we hear some of the so-called, would-be church losses tell how the preachers generally are poor financiers, when God blesses their hearts, if they had to get by on what the-super do, they would be in jail. A preacher and wife, who are the backbone of their family, contribute to the cause of Mis- sions, and help support the church of which he is pastor on less money than any other man on the top of God's lordship. As a matter of fact, they are the greatest financiers in the world. Now and then some preacher does not show good sense along financial lines, and his position makes him conspicuous because he is a preacher. He is in the public eye, and you will hear some wise- cracking, slimy, tight-wad church member talking about the failure of the preacher along financial lines.

The old saying that a preacher's son is the biggest devil that ever run, has been exploded long ago by statistical facts, which go to show that while there have been some misfits, the greatest characters in the country were born in a par- sorne. I suppose the reason people feel that a preacher's son is so bad, is because of the fact that he is a preacher's son, and if he should go astray, it is more noticeable and meitichs that is the same reason why people never think for themselves are so quick to say that preachers are poor financiers. Take any crowd of profes- sional men in the country, and let them re- ceive no more wages than the rank and file of preachers do, and you would find a very different story.

May God bless these faithful men who for the privilege of preaching the cross of Jesus Christ receive far below their real value for services rendered in dollars and cents, and are glad and happy to script and sacrifice for the privilege of following their God-given convictions.

THE HERALD OF HOLINESS
Of course, all of the preachers are interested in the Herald of Holiness campaign, and now that the price is down to $1.00 a year, it is within the reach of every preacher, I am sure, to make his quota. First church, Chicago, has just succeeded in this. Some pastors have inquired from me how we did it. We first sent to the Publishing House and asked for a list of the people who took the Herald of Holiness in Chicago. This they sent, and we quickly sent us. We then culled from the names all the folks who were members of First church and began there with a start. We then presented the envelopes every Sunday, and sometimes Wednesday nights, asking for new subscriptions. After we had done that, we asked the folks who did not feel they could afford to pay $1.00, but might have 75c, 50c, or even a dime, and if they would like the Herald of Holiness, and could pay anything to put their name and address on the envelopes that were passed out, and return them to us. This they did. The next Sunday we asked the people who were able to, and would be willing to make a contribution to help these folks secure the Her- ald of Holiness that were not able to pay for a whole year's subscription, to take an envelope and put some money in it. Needless to say we received a number of subscriptions paid in full.

Of course, we also gave every person uniting with the church one year's subscription to the Herald of Holiness, revised about seven- eenty members into the church last year. That would mean seventy subscriptions for some- times there were two or three of one family to unite, but we saw that every new family that came into the church got a subscription to the Herald of Holiness. Then when we go visiting, we take envelopes in our pocket and ask if they take the Herald of Holiness, and frequently get subscriptions in this way. Then we take the bun- de subscriptions at 15c apiece for ten or more copies, and send them to the people who we know are worthy but unable to secure the paper, so they receive a copy each week. By the bundle method we receive the papers ten in a bundle for 15c apiece, as we stated before, and that makes it about 75c a year, which is the price that is sent directly to their home by the Publishing House. Frequently people will hand me $1.00 to $100.00 (generally the small amount) saying, "Use this where you may see fit," and our labor is free as we have folks in the church who wrap these papers and see they are handed out. All we ask for the free distribution of the Herald of Holiness is that they read its pages. Then when we come to our General and District Budget day (unified budget offering), they know what we are talking about, and are ready to respond. We are planning this year on having the folks of the church underwrite $9,000 for District and General budgets, and closer of the needy in the local churches. We are counting the three, and by the help of God, will meet it.

This is only a suggested method, and is given only because we have been asked by some pas- tors how we did it in First church. You may have a better plan, or better plans may present themselves to you, but of this we are sure, that nothing will work without a plan, and no plan will succeed unless it is practiced. It is surprising how many little things a pastor can introduce that, in the long run, will spell success for him if he industriously works the plan.

The Publishing House tells us that the trouble isn't getting subscriptions—it is taking care of the expirations. Therefore we have a list of our church members whose subscriptions run out every month of the year, and the month previous to the expiration we either call those folks up by phone or see them personally and get them to renew. Don't think, my brother, that this will detract from your pastoral work. It will give you a better hold on the people, as you will discover, if you work it one year.

What do you say that every one of us this year do our best to bring the Herald of Holiness subscriptions up to 40,000, or one-half of the church membership? If the Publishing House can have 40,000 subscriptions, they can make the Herald of Holiness self-supporting, and breth- ren, we can do it just as sure as you live. Per- sonally, we have no opposition or objection to the Nazarene program, but are doing our best to work in harmony with it; neither have we any criticism for the "powers-that-be" in Kansas City. We believe they are interested in the success of the local church just as much as in the general church, for it is only as the local church succeeds that the general church can hope to forge ahead.

Write immediately to P. H. Lunn, 223 Toosd Ave, Kansas City, Mo., and ask him for a package of envelopes, and present them to your congregation next Sunday morning, either for free subscriptions or any plan which you may have. Then, if you do this, it is sure. Try it, and you will be delighted.
PSYCHOLOGY FOR THE MINISTER

Chapter 6. The Contributions of New Psychology to the Minister

THE NATURE OF NEW PSYCHOLOGY

NEW psychology is a term applied to recent movements in the field of psychology. As you may have learned from the Saturday Evening Post, the urgent need for a psychology of the unconscious mind, the formation of mental complexes, emotional conflicts which result in personality disturbances, repressed desires, the fulfillment of wish-urges, etc. Its greatest contribution is found in the treatment of abnormal minds, those cases which resist psychotherapy and find their satisfaction in a complete escape from the realities of life. The leaders in this field have been such men as Freud, Jung, Adler and Sadler. Much of the thinking of these men is not accepted by orthodox psychologists, but their techniques are being employed constantly by psychiatrists, or those who treat mental diseases. It is here that the value of the new psychology is found. The great discovery of new psychology has been that of the subconscious mind.

THE DUAL NATURE OF THE MIND

Sadler says that in a limited sense we are all double or multiple personalities. At no time of one's existence is the total of the mental and the accumulated experience in the spotlight of immediate consciousness. That vast bulk of the psychic life is hidden in the subconscious realms. There is a part of the mind which operates directly within the range of this spotlight, and a greater amount of it which is always on the fringe. Every life is packed full of mental images, which are subconscious to function properly and find their satisfaction in a complete escape from the realities of life. When we think from the entire range of these ideas and neutral patterns, which result in thought, we grope around in this marginal-consciousness and find the ideas which are to be used, and focus them on one central line.

Hence while the mind is a unit, still the conscious portion is surrounded by a marginal region wherein mental impressions, and the stuff from which experience is formed, are found. This marginal region, or subconscious mind, is the repository of all the forces of life. When this material is normal, then the mental reactions are normal. But when it is diseased, or abnormal, then psychic disturbances abound. Certain disturbances within this region result in the mind trying to eliminate the sources of trouble. This lower region of mental life also has the power of seeming materialization of its loading and wishes.

Certain wishes are embedded in the unconscious mind, which through the power of projection, have the power of materializing the elements which are the basis of the wish. Dreams are usually explained by this method. Hidden in the unconscious mind are unfilled wishes, which the mind through a dream brings to a mental consummation or materialization. Most of the dreams and automatic writings can be thus explained.

Whatever has once been deposited in the mind, and finds itself a part of the vast unconscious system of mental life, is never lost. It can be utilized in the life of the individual.

THE FORMATION OF COMPLEXES

Ideas and emotions can be grouped together within this unconscious region in the same manner as in the conscious mind. Things which occur together, or are recalled with some type of relationship existing between them are bound to one another by the power of association. In this subconscious reservoir there is a similar association of ideas, emotions and memories which is constantly going on. This unifying of ideas, emotions and thought processes is known as "complex formation."

The life of the average person is controlled by definite complexes, or "sets" of mental reactions which are laid in the submerged portion of the mind. Certain feelings are related; until a stimulation arouses this "unit of correlated emotions," and one becomes moody, or is charged with the power of an encompassing sentiment, or is controlled by a high ideal, or dominated by a wrong attitude. All such moods or currents of emotional reactions might be called a form of multiple personality.

At one time the minister finds members of his official board easily moved for any righteous cause, aggressive, and again they are opposed to practically every aggressive program. Certain things occur which touch upon a complex buried within the subconscious, and the mind is controlled by this. The minister can do well by recognizing such hidden springs of action and try to eliminate all from his program which will tend to arouse or stimulate them. Some congregations have been brought up on a conservative program so long that it is impossible for an alert, aggressive minister to please them with his program. Others have been so dragged into a dead-ening lethargy by the "usual method" of working, that to propose a new plan spells dooms. Congregations, as well as individuals, may develop set complexes, or emotional standstills toward their work, and to go contrary to them means failure.

One lives so long in a certain environment that he takes on its color. The atmosphere of the home, the church, the office begins to condition the thinking of the individual, until he is unable to distract his mind from this. He thinks in terms of this, and finds his interests centered here. When new sensations come to him, he is unable to relate them to his life without sending through this "mill" of his associations. He belongs to a certain political party, and gradually he builds into his thinking the platform of this organization, and his life is in terms of it. He reads a certain paper for years, and his actions become dominated by the editorial policy of the paper. At home he may be a "tyrant" because at the office he is entirely repressed in all freedom of thought and action. Or in the church, quite become dominating, because at home or in his social life, he is forced to think entirely like the group.

Several sets of ideas may thus grow up in the same personality, and in unusual cases these separate from each other, and the interesting phenomenon of a multiple personality appears. This means that one or two, or even more, types of thinking have been developed, and have become separated from each other.

These conditions are found in most people, but in a lesser degree. Practically everyone is made up of many "sets of personalities." For one time their emotions are radical; but business they are self-restrained. This is seen in numerous churches, where on Sunday the members are religious, but during the week their religion and business form two "water-tight compartments."

COMPLEXES AND REPRESSIONS

It has long been a theory in new psychology that complexes of a serious nature are formed by repressions. This means that some of the dominant emotions of the sex life, strong wishes and urges which are related to the instincts, are forced into the unconscious life by not allowing them expression. In this unconscious mind they "fester" and increase in power by relating themselves to similar emotions. Finally, they become sufficiently strong to break into the conscious mind, and here they work havoc.

It is a common sight to see a young man live a normal, moral life, and all of a sudden "go to pieces on the rocks of immorality." This was true in France during the war, when many of our young men came back socially impure. Their moral urges had been repressed, until finally the complex gained the upper hand, and they did that which under other circumstances they would never have dreamed of doing.

The wise principle to follow is never consciously to repress any emotion into the unconscious life, which can be given a normal expression. This is where the psychology of sin finds its enforcement. Hidden sins, repressions in the nature of secret thought, longings, and the vicarious satisfaction of lusts through the mind, find their enlargement in the unconscious mind through repression. When in this realm they grow in strength until finally the entire personality is conditioned and motivated by this complex. It is as natural for some young people to look at life through the complex of lust and sex as for them to breathe. They have thought of sex, real sexual stories, looked at sex display pictures, attended movies where the motif was sex and lust, and through "petting parties" have lived so much on the borderland of passionate emotions, that they have built into their thinking complexes, emotional reactions, which are slanted toward sexual stimulations. The urge in which we live falls more at this point than at any other. The very atmosphere is tinted with the lure of sex. The result is that our young people build into the warp and woof of their mental machinery this urge. They become controlled by it.

Repressed anger, stresses of irritability, and morbidness throw into the blood stream, and into the mental life forces which begin to wreck the entire being. One becomes out of tune with life. It is well never to allow anger to arise in the life, for either one must give expression to it, which is a sin, or it is repressed into the subconscious mind, where it smolders and makes the life out of harmony with truth and righteousness.

MENTAL ILL HEALTH

We now see the importance of this unconscious mind, in which the complexes have their origin. Anything thrown into it by means of repression, or action, gathers around it similar emotional urges, and is liable to break out in the conscious mind. It is like cancer in the blood, which if cured in one spot, grows in another. The entire blood stream must be purified, and then the body is healed. The same is true with complexes in the subconscious life. As long as they remain alive, though one is unconscious of their existence, they are liabilities upon the character. Anger though controlled however as long as it may break forth at any time. A fear complex, produced by fear or fright in childhood, unless resolved may control the entire life of an individual, until he lives under its spell entirely. Then whatever one does, he is afraid it may not please others, or may fail, or may not be done well enough. He is afraid of the present, and the future is dark.

"Fictionally complex work the same." One has the feeling that he is inferior to others. He is afraid to face life with its realities. He fails in his work, for he feels inferior to the tasks and their demands upon him. The opposite complex works the same character damages as this one. One becomes "puffed up," vain in his attitude toward others, and seems to carry the "better than thou hearing." The aggravated disposition comes from a constant outcropping of such a dominating complex. We often say that some must rule or ruin. They have built into their complexes this dominating attitude and are un-satisfied unless they seem to be "on top." This throws vitrino into the character, and they appear out of harmony with every movement in which they are not (to employ an old expression) "the bell sheep." The mirth and joy in the soul turns into a toxic, and the life is always blue and disregulated.

Psychic or mental ill health results from such complexes. Ofttimes when the extremes of multiple personality are found, one personality will do things when in control of the life, which the other hates with a dreaded fire. When a complex forces one to act in a manner which the better character, or the higher elements in the personality may condemn, then the mind is not at ease. The better self pulls in one way, and in the opposite direction the lower will urge to action. There is thus a tangle in the emotions which surges through the mind. This produces worry, irritability, hasty speaking, harsh words. The inner life becomes a jungle of terror in which there is no peace nor harmony. One is absolutely unadjusted to life as he finds it. Mental sickness rules the personality.

Sin produces a similar condition. In the study of conversion it has been found that the dominant change is one which affects the will, and harmonizes the emotions of the life. Before this transformation took place the self was divided between duty and pleasure, the better and the worse urges of the emotions, purely and a satisfaction of the passions. But conversion tended to unify the emotional life around one center, and to cause the stream of one's will to run in the channel of the will of God. Peace follows such a change, for the inner life is harmonized.

The minister finds many people who are laboring under such mental ill health. If he can help them harmonize their desires and urges, and to find a place of satisfaction in their work, the health condition will be improved. If the conflicted self state is due to sin, the only way by which it will be bettered is through repentance, and a faith in the achieving power of God. Peace will cause the storms of emotions to subside, and the life will become harmonious.

MENTAL ILL HEALTH AND EMOTIONAL CONFLICTS

Every emotion has a certain amount of urge or power which is attached to it. This tends to drive the personality in those directions which will satisfy it. If these desires or emotions in which we may call our "desire scale" are denied a sufficient satisfaction, because others seem to "defeat the outer cloth" of their life, they will not "drop" as a result. This is the explanation of melancholy, and often leads to neurosis and insanity. If the emotions are in conflict and are dominated by destructive feelings, one must suffer thereby.

There are various sets of dominant urges in life, the self-preservation instincts, the sex urge, and the worship or religious emotions, the power urge, and the social urge. The first deals with self-preservation, living. The second covers the large range of emotions related to sex. The religious emotions or urges are those connected with religion and worship. The power urge is something in man which causes him to desire to rule, to build his life above, that of his fellow-men. And the social urge leads man to live in harmony with others. When any of these are in conflict, as for instance a desire to be wealthy and that by all means, and the religious urge which would tend to have one controlled by a clean conscience, there must result trouble for the personality. Success in life, and harmony in the soul are the result of the unity of these dominant urges. When they are out of tune with each other, there can be no peace. When the religious State, or the life indwelt by Christ, and centered around 'Him, is controlling the entire personality there is unity and peace.

ELIMINATING THE MISCHIEVOUS COMPLEX
Whatever the nature of the complex one's interest centers in eliminating it from the personality. It may be a conscience complex which is the disturbing element, where the conscience is super-sensitive and always has one "in hot water as to his actions." An inadequacy feeling may control the life where one tries to hide from the realities of living by practicing mental self-deception. One may play Pollyanna, and try to think that all is bright and well. Or one may pull himself into his shell and be unwilling to try to achieve, and let the world go by. Many take the hero-route and succeed, or face life, vicariously as a hero. Off times day-dreaming is a substitute for living. Some people find satisfaction by thinking that they are "suffering heroes," wherein everyone tries to injure them, and all the world bears upon them. These are methods by which they are trying to escape reality. But lack of such are complex which cause the personality disturbance. These complexes must be eliminated from the happy, so that one may live normally and be happy.

First the complex must be discovered. One must know what causes the trouble. Several methods are used for discovering them: An analysis of the dreams can be made, where the emotional repressions are thought by some to be expressed. Day dreams should be studied, and the peculiar shot of them noted. There is also the free association test, wherein one goes over a selected list of one hundred words, and gives the first word which comes into his mind from each one of these. When there is a hesitancy in giving a word, stammering, or a repetition, or two or more words given for one test word, or a failure to respond at all, or a tendency to whisper the response word, or laughter or crying in saying the word, new psychologists believe they have discovered the type of the complex. This list of words can be found in any good book on the subject, such as Sadler's "The Mind at Mischief."

Again there is the talking route for unearthing these complex. By this method the patient is allowed to talk freely about his life, and the things he repeats, or stresses, or lingers on, are usually thought of as being sources of the trouble. The writing cure is similar to this, but the patient is urged to write, instead of speak.

When one applies the method himself it is well to allow the mind to "soar aimlessly while you gently guide it back into your past life and observe what channels it seems to drift into. Note the phases to which it drifts, to which it will gravitate toward, and in this way you may gain helpful hints as to the real nature of your nervous troubles. Look back into your early life and frankly endeavor to recognize your earliest emotional shocks, serious disappointments, strong repressions to identify what is in the way, antihates, as well as to note very early ambitions and more profound nervous disturbances" (Sadler, op. cit., pp. 375, 376).

You should learn to check up on your allibles, your excuses for success and peace. Look for your tendencies to camouflage your life, and study carefully your emotional reactions and behavior. After discovering the emotional source disturbances, you must make this conscious. Talk about it; bring it out of the past, and see the first source of the trouble. Analyze the path that it has taken. If possible find a friend, in whom you believe, and make a confidant of him or her. Tell to the one all the trouble. It is here that the test is (the test he is looking for) of Jesus is supreme. He lays as basic to the work of conversion, that radical transformation which eliminates all evil from the life, the practice of confession. This is bringing the "unconscious into the conscious life" In the terms of psycho-analysis, Confession lays bare the very deeps of the life, as well as the mental sources of the same, the thoughts, emotions and urges to which one yields himself. This brings it into the open, and makes it conscious. There will be no peace until this step is taken. As will be pointed out in the chapter on the psychology of religion, the reason peace follows conversion is because of the fact that the entire life is freed from its emotional disturbances, and the strains which are put upon the basic urges of the life, through maladjustment to each other. The entire emotional life becomes harmonious.

SUBLIMATION OF COMPLEXES AND URGES
Let us trace through a native urge in the life which may or may not be wrong. "Take the sex urge for instance. If it comes to be satisfied, either normally or abnormally, and if the latter is true, conscience burns or warns of trouble, and sin results. It may be repressed into the unconscious life, and here it will wreck mental harmony and produce emotional conflicts and disturbances of the personality. For it will gather around it other repressed sex urges, and sooner or later break out in the personality as a festering sore. Again, another urge of a different type may develop into it which will bring it out, and quite another set of the evil effects of the act of repression. The mind may be employed in work, the emotions may be drained of their power through turning to other activities. By this means, we have found that an urge can be carried out to fulfillment without harm and without representation, so that this urge may, through this may be handled through sublimation. Which means that we raise the urge to a higher phase and let its energy be drained through other channels. Many who have been denied the natural expression of the sex life have found satisfaction in the adoption and care of children. Offtimes we read of wealthy ladies establishing hospitals for children, or similar deeds of mercy. This is the sublimation of an urge to a higher phase of life. Sadler notes the case of "the peeping Tom," a perturbed case of observationism, as he terms it. He says that this tendency to pry into the forbidden, could have been sublimated into the pursuit, of the scientist. This sublimation demands the conversion of psychic energy into other channels, wherein one can work and live happily. The urge or instinct of pugnacity may be converted into the driving power necessary for commercial competition and social rivalry, and it may even be carried into competition in the school work. The energy which usually attends the natural urges of man can be successfully sublimated into other channels, where it can be worked out of, the life with pleasing results.

THE MINISTER AND SUBLIMATION
The great task of the minister is that of being a confidant of his congregation. Among his people are those suffering from mental conflicts, emotional repressions, the driving into the unconscious life of energy and urges, without satisfaction. It is his duty to be a "consultant" for all such cases. His heart must be opened to their needs, and he must be able to lead them to talk out of their past, and to bring to the surface of consciousness their hidden complexes, over which they hang around the minister which is able to tap this hidden source of emotional disturbances among his people, and to have them "make the unconscious conscious" through talking with him, is successful and blessed. He must be alert in directing those who need transformation through Christ to the demand for confession to Christ alone as the source of forgiveness.

Then there is a higher phase of his work to which he must pay attention. For those who have energies, urges which should be given, a foster sphere, it must supply them for to engage in. Many a young man finds that the natural sex urge, with which he is struggling, can be sublimated through burying himself in the work of the church. Young women resolve many of their complexes, resulting from repression by finding some task in the church school, such as teaching, of social service work in the church. The happy minister finds outlets for the energy and urges of his congregation.

THANKSGIVING DAY
The annual observance of a day of national Thanksgiving gives the pastor a splendid opportunity to emphasize some important, phases of Christian living. The Sunday before this day should be capitalized as a thanksgiving occasion. The pastor's morning message should be along this line, emphasizing the place of praise, thanksgiving or gratitude in Christian living. These special occasions enable the pastor to stress some truths that perhaps at other times would not be well received.

PRACTICE CHRIST

Preach Christ for the one purpose of winning men to a definite acceptance of Him as Savior and Lord.

Preach Christ directly rather than in doctrinal discussions.

Preach Christ as Savior and Lord, employing therefore the time and energy ordinarily directed at this season to raising money and meeting the budget.

Preach Christ as a means for creating that passion out of which recruits to the ministry and missionary forces are found.

Preach Christ with whatever understanding of Him you may have, but with the purpose to get others to receive Him as Savior and Lord.

Preach Christ with a background of living faith in personal experience of and daily fellowship with Christ himself.

Preach Christ with earnestness.

Preach Christ in the conviction that men are lost, apart from Him.

Preach Christ as the stoning Savior and the life-giving Lord.

Preach Christ to children in the home and schools, to the congregations assembled in churches, to friends and acquaintances wherever.

Preach Christ to somebody every day.

Preach Christ without the surrender of a single conviction of sin.

Preach Christ with a larger sympathy for and patience with men who differ from us, and who, from our point of view, have made, and are making, serious mistakes.

Preach Christ unimpeded by criticism, opposition, or difficulties.

Preach Christ with such zeal and devotion as will require all the intelligence we have and the employment of every faculty of which we are possessed and all the knowledge we may acquire.

Preach Christ, ringing the changes upon His name, His salvation, and His presence till the whole nation is aflame with a consciousness of need and a cry for mercy and the confessions of redeemed souls.

PREACH CHRIST

Preach Christ till you know that God the Holy Spirit is satisfied with what you have done, and the way you are doing it.

Preach Christ with a 'singleness of purpose' that submerges every other interest in this one supreme privilege.

Preach Christ now, today, where you are, to those whom you meet.

Preach Christ exultantly, militantly.

Preach Christ, and thus fulfill your faith and your ministry.

J. C. MASSEE, In The Free Methodist.

THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

I am on the road and must therefore attend a church of another denomination when I do not find one of my own, which is so often the case. For I do believe in going to church on Sunday. What I want to know is this: Why don't the preachers give us good, old-fashioned sermons any more? All we may listen to now are lectures on this, that, and the other thing. Even on Palm Sunday, when I thought I would surely hear about Christ, the subject was misleading, for all I got out of it was a lecture on needs of today. Don't we want to hear about the real thing, I am old-fashioned, and that I don't care to hear good lectures. I do, but not on Sunday mornings in church. I can read all about these other things in the papers and libraries, and I do. But I am old-fashioned enough to want the crucified Christ on Sundays in church. I often wonder whether the ministers themselves do not believe in Christ any more. We hear so little of Him. I know many who feel just as I do about this matter of today. If they must speak about current events let them use the midweek service for that. But please, please, "we would see Jesus."—Chicago Tribune.

LUST—THE POWER OF WORSHIP

In this busy practical age some of us think that humanitarian service is the highest spiritual activity of man. We strike the note of ethics hard and often. There are those who think that prayer is the highest spiritual activity of man; but man's most exciting spiritual activity is worship. The most unspiritual person can come to God asking for this or that benefit; but it takes some discipline of the soul properly to worship God. 'The Lord's Prayer begins with worship.'

I sat next at table to one of Cleveland's most prominent business men. I studied his kindly face as he spoke; he is a man of 70, his hair is silver white. He has had a busy, successful life, and has been associated with leaders in American business. His mind, his life are representative of today in business America.

Honoring me with his serious thoughts upon the deep things of life and religion, he said, "I was with my father when he died; I also stood by my mother's bedside when she breathed her last. Both were saintly people; their religion was as natural to them as the beating of their hearts. When my father died, and when my mother died, I heard them saying over and over, in calm and peace, the words, 'Yes, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me.'"

He looked at me and his eyes were troubled. "But when I go, I will find it harder to say."

He represents the mind of today, perhaps; the mind which has been fed with a very great deal of conjecture and skepticism, the mind which has been influenced to demand "a demonstration of things," something visible, tangible, tested by our senses. But when it came to facing the mighty problem of life, he could have no part of it. All the metaphysics, all the effort of his less sophisticated parents were able to bring down into the valley of the shadow a strength superior to his own.

 Probably our parents were not better people morally than our own generation; this generation, like every other, is brought by the very circumstances of life to face with the sharp items of our common fate; mankind must still make a vital struggle. It may be that the point at which we have lost something is at this point of worship. We have had so much science and power and change that our minds are molded by these things, and some of the most earnest among us find themselves in the position of the old patriarch Job, who cried, as life appeared almost overwhelming to his reason, "Oh, that I knew where I might find him. . . ." Many are losing their sense of God; may it not be because we have neglected to school our spirits in worship?

RALPH WALKER, In THE BAPTIST.

THE PRAYER MEETING

We 'want you to come to the place of prayer; but unless you have been bowing over God's Word during the week, unless you have been facing and fighting the Lord as He stands revealed in that Word, what can you impart? And the danger today in our meetings for prayer and
-testimony is that instead of lifting each other up, we let each other down by our superficial experiences and our empty repetitions of dead words.
It is an old book about which we are talking, but I am certain that any of you, by studying it patiently each week, can make discoveries of truth which will thrill you as a startling piece of news does. Indeed, the old Book is "good news from a far country." And if a score of you should get possessed and fired with a piece of this divine intelligence, and were to come into our assembly and pour it out, what a kindling there would be among the members on our spiritual heartstrings! O brethren, light your fires anew! God's Word! Let us cease coming to one another for help and enrichment, and come to the Lord and abide in the Lord, "in whom are hid all the riches of knowledge and wisdom."—A. J. Gowan, in the Moody Bible Institute, Monthly.

YET THE CHURCH SURVIVES

By A CHURCHMAN

In one church in a single year I found the following things the matter, according to various individuals:

1. The sermons are too long.
2. The sermons are too short.
3. The preacher talks too loud.
4. Cannot hear the preacher.
5. Babies and small children not welcome.
6. Might as well not go; so many small children present distract me.
7. Preacher too familiar; speaks to everyone, whether introduced or not.
8. Preacher too cold; should speak to all.
9. Preacher's wife too dressy; should set example of simplicity.
10. Preacher's wife too plain; should get new hat.
11. Church officers too strict; old days of discipline impossible now.
12. Church officers too lenient; authority and discipline needed.
13. Unscriptural commercial choir; praying volunteer choir needed.
14. Incompetent volunteer choir; give us real music, not sanctimoniousness.
15. Church members never noticed me.

16. Church members too effusive.
17. A poor man has no chance there; offices and honors go to the rich.
18. Rich man always heered for more money;
church maintained by rich for the poor.
19. Should frankly tell congregation financial condition and need each week, and give people chance to help.
20. Too much money talk from pulpit; kills spirit of worship.
21. Young people get practically no consideration; but plenty criticism.
22. Young people try to run everything; I will go where grown people have rights, too.
23. Pastor too orthodox.
24. Pastor not orthodox enough (same pastor).
25. Should have doctrinal and missionary ternings.
26. Too much doctrinal and missionary preaching; should have book reviews and popular stuff.
27. The lights hurt my eyes; dim light would be better for church.
28. Could not see to read hymns; dim religious light should be outlawed.
representatives preach.
30. Let too many outside agencies in; everything should be budgeted and no extra appeals.
31. Pastor neglects presbytery, synod and outside contacts.
32. Pastor always running around to this, that and the other meeting; should stick to work.
33. Why do they not get rid of these obsolete hymn books?
34. What on earth did they put in these revised hymns for? I liked the old ones.
35. The church auditorium is too severely plain.
36. Church too rich in appearance; humble folks ill at ease.
37. They give too much to benevolence; charity should stay at home.
38. They spend too much on self; benevolence is the church's main thrust.
39. Should have sermons on prohibition and other practical reforms.
40. Could not approve pastor's support of probhibition, so I quit.

And there were still more. Yet that church lived on and grew; and the pastor did not go crazy, nor rich, nor become a pessimist. In spite of such evidence, some people still imagine the church is not divine. What else could keep it alive except divinity?—The Presbyterian.

A Child's Bill of Rights

In the office of the Church Federation of Los Angeles, there hangs an illuminated copy of the Child's Bill of Rights:

"To be born rich,
To be loved,
To have his individually respected,
To be trained wisely in body, mind and spirit,
To be protected from evil persons and influences,
To have a fair chance in life."

The tests of life are to make, not break us.
Trouble may demolish a man's business but build up his character. The blow at the outward man may be the greatest blessing to the inner man.
If God, then, puts or permits anything hard in our lives, let us believe that the real peril in the real trouble, is what we shall lose if we flinch or rebel.—Malvina Barock.

Immigration in the fiscal year ending July 1 fell below the 100,000 mark for the first time since the Civil War. With the exception of a

In the last fiscal year the net gain was 35,000.
There were slightly more than 97,000 arrivals,

THE PREACHER AS A PIONEER

By the Editor

It is easy to overemphasize the idea that "the church is responsible." We do not need to engage in the old scholastic debate on the chronological precedence of the hen and the egg. They used to question whether the Lord made a hen and she laid an egg or whether He made an egg and from this hatched the hen. But we know that God made the preacher and from him sprung the church. Jesus Christ trained and ordained preachers, but these preachers raised up and organized the church. And one who has visited non-Christian lands as I have done within the last few months has seen another clear representation of it. We do not send churches to these lands. We send preachers and the preachers raise up the church.

But at the present moment we are not thinking far back as the origin of churches. Rather are thinking of the preacher as a pioneer regardless of the age of the church which he serves. Our thought is suggested by the fact that the most useful churches are usually associated with a man. "Beecher's church," "Spurgeon's church," "Talmage's church," etc. These churches were units of great denominations, but it was in each case the preacher who pioneered the church to its peculiar type and place of prominence. Each of these churches became famous, but it was the pastor who showed and led the way to the place which it occupied.

Of course there is danger of officiousness and many a preacher has failed because he was so. But this is but an imitation of the quality of which we speak. After all the difference between a politician and a statesman is more often in the type and wisdom of the men than in the matter of their motives. The politician does not see and think, he just makes as though he does and the people see through the veneer. The statesman sees and thinks and the people learn to trust his leadership. Many a preacher stands up and says, "We must pray more, we must be more spiritual, we must work harder, we must get out and build up the kingdom of God." But these words are but the expression of a weak desire and poor practice and shallow conviction, and the church becomes weak and poor and shallow under such leadership. But if the preacher not only preaches prayer, but prays indeed; not only uses a spiritual vocabulary, but lives in the depths of things divine; and is constrained by convictions which make the genuine to shine through all appearances and the real to stand up under all circumstances, the church will become like its pastor.

Perhaps one of our greatest weaknesses is our desire and hope to obtain worthwhile results without paying worthwhile causes. The old alchemist tried to find his course by the position of the stars instead of applying himself to the principles of discipline and life. The old alchemist sought to turn base metals into gold without expending much of effort and expense in the process. And so we would like to be spiritual and useful and successful and be the leader of such a people without paying the price for such a privilege. Especially would we like to ignore the time element. We would like to rise like a meteor and then abide like a star. We would like to grow up like a pumpkin and then be as hardy and useful as an oak. We would like to make use of some spiritual alchemy which will turn the lead of indifference and the brass of mere human emotion into the gold of spiritual joy and power and abiding victory. But it cannot be done. One can get a sanctified heart in the twinkling of an eye, but it takes time and test and trials faithfully endured to make character. Of course the process may be hastened by intensifying the heat and increasing the pressure, but even then the time element cannot be altogether eliminated.

But anyway, let us not forget that the preacher is the pioneer, not only in the founding of the church in the days of the apostles and in the community in which it is raised up in our own day, but in the progress and onward movement of the church as the days go by. Depth and length and breadth in the church cannot well exceed the measurements of the preacher. And not only is this true, but even an earnest church will drift under the leadership of a little preacher. And I mean little in the sense of soul-measurements. “Feed the flock of God over which the Holy Ghost has made you overseers.” “Reprove, rebuke, exhort, let no man despise you.” That is, call on others to follow you as you follow Christ. But do not forget that if new fields are to be possessed, the preacher must be the pioneer.

In an address to preachers a few weeks ago, the speaker said, “Forty is the danger line for preachers. By this time the preacher has probably decided that he knows fairly well how to do his work, and he will not grow any more. He will be tempted to hash over his preaching material and discover nothing new. The best way for him to save himself is to adopt a new course of study and hold himself to it as rigidly as he did when he was an undergraduate. And by some such means he will not only become intensive, but he will also broaden out. And it may be he can save himself from the inroads of dry rot and premature deterioration.” How old are you?

LESSONS FROM THE LIFE OF DAVID

A Chapel Address by A. M. Hills

Jehovah hath sought him a man after his own heart, and Jehovah hath appointed him to be prince over his people, because that [Saul] hath not kept that which Jehovah commanded thee (1 Sam. 13:14 R.V.).

DAVID was one of the very greatest of the world’s great men. Long before he was born, in the first book of the Bible, prophecy gave the scepter to the tribe of Judah. But the tribe of Judah did not have the pre-eminence till David came to the throne and fathered a dynasty of kings. He himself beyond compare was the greatest of them all. And in the last book and last chapter and almost the last verse of the Bible the Son of God himself links his own name, that is above every name, with that of David, “I am the root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star.”

Such surpassing greatness is no accident. I wish to study with you this morning the sources of it for your own instruction and inspiration. The Amazon River is two hundred miles wide at its mouth, but it had its rise in the small streams in the mountain heights of the mighty Andes. What were the streams that fed this mighty Amazon tide of David’s influence which has flowed across three millennia of human history, and with never more power than now?

1. He developed to a high degree of excellence his physical nature. A great soul; to achieve great things must have a good machine to use. The aged prophet is told to go to Bethlehem and anoint a son of Jesse to be king. The old man’s sons are made to pass before him according to their age: Eliah first, a man of noble personal presence. “Surely the Lord’s anointed is before him,” thought Samuel, but Jehovah said, “Look not on his countenance or on the height of his stature; for the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance but the Lord looketh on the heart.” “Now he was ruddy and withal of a beautiful countenance and goodly to look to,” and twenty-two years old. He doubtless had the bright, keen eye, the vigorous walk, the elastic step, the firm muscle, and the endurance of perfect health. He was inured to hardship, seasoned by trial, storm and tempest—a red-checked, bronzed, athletic, courageous, young man. He had already tackled and conquered by the help of God a lion and a bear in defense of his helpless sheep.

Now that kind of manhood is still needed by those who propose to achieve great things and bear great burdens in the world. And it is not made by sacking cigarettes, drinking whiskey and spending your midnight in palaces of sin. Years of idleness and self-indulgence do not produce any royal manhood.

II. Notice that David had early piccy. How do we know? Oh, we learn it, as it were, from his diary. I read in the 27th Psalm (R.V.), “Then God made me trust when I was upon my mother’s breasts. Thou art my God since my mother bore me;” and in Psalm 16:3, “O, my soul, thou hast yielded unto Jehovah, Thou art my Lord;” and in verse 7, “I will bless Jehovah, who hath given me counsel.” In verse 8, 9, “I have set Jehovah always before me; because he is at my right hand I shall not be moved. Therefore my heart is glad.”

If David had been a God-rejecting, blasphemy-lust Jehovah would not have said to old Samuel, “Arise and anoint him, for this is he.” Young people, God is still selecting devout, prayerful, young people to fill conspicuous places in His kingdom.

III. He had a gift for music, and while his sheep were quietly feeding or resting in the pasture, he was diligently practicing on his harp. How many, many young people have God-given musical gifts which are all neglected and left un-nurtured. Our loving heavenly Father imparts our several gifts to us, and every man’s life is a plan of God. He knows just what He wants each one of us to do and be. He has the place for us to fill which we can never do unless we develop the faculties and powers He has given us.

Music adds immensely to the power of the sanctuary services. It makes the home delightful and saves it from many degrading influences. Blessed are the young people who discover their gifts and train them to use in the service of God. David did it and his reputation as a musician spread until it reached the ears of the king, and he was sent for to be a member of the court and royal family where he learned Kingship, and the art of commanding men, and ultimately of leading the praises of Israel.

IV. He practiced using his sling, an ancient weapon of war. He might have been too lazy to practice, but not he! That was a useful accomplishment and he had a laudable ambition to excel in everything useful. Practice! Practice! Practice! Slinging at this, and that and the other mark, ten thousand times till he became a prodigy of skill, without any expectation of any great thing coming of it. There came a day in the history of God's people when a heathen giant was defying the armies of the living God, day after day. David's father sent his shepherd boy to the army with some rations for the older brothers. While there the giant Goliath came out and blasphemed God and defied His people.

David had never heard such blasphemy before and was amazed that nobody in all the army of Israel resented such an insult to their living God. He boldly said, "I'll fight him." He chose five smooth stones out of the brook and put them in his wallet, and took his staff and his sling and in the name of God went to meet him.

David looked so insignificant in comparison that the brazen, bearded Goliath cursed him. David modestly answered, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and a javelin: but I come to thee in the name of Jehovah of hosts, the God..." But Goliath defied. This day will Jehovah deliver thee into my hand; and I will smite thee, and take thy head from thee.

V. This young Hebrew studied noble literature. It was not very extensive; Greek and Roman literature did not exist. Of the Hebrew Bible, only Job, the Five Books of Moses, Joshua, Judges, Ruth and Samuel existed. But this pious youth probably committed all of them to memory. At any rate, explain it as we will, this shepherd lad, out in the sheep-pasture, without academy or college, acquired a literary style that, for force and beauty and majesty of utterance, has seldom been equaled and almost never surpassed. Almost immediately after he comes into public notice he begins to write those prophetic and worshipful psalms that have voiced the prayers and praises and devotions of the people of God in worshiping assemblies for three thousand years. He may well be called the poet-laureate of the Church and kingdom of God. Probably a hundred thousand congregations every Sabbath pray, or praise, or confess their sins in the language of David. Even Christ, when dying on the cross, prayed one of his prayers.

VI. Notice, now, that David fell on the social side of his nature. He multiplied wives, which God never encouraged, and married Maacah, daughter of the heathen king of Geshur, which God expressly forbade. This heathen princess was no doubt very beautiful and godless. She bore David his beautiful son, Absalom, whom he loved so passionately and intended to make his successor on the throne. That mother sang no holy lullabies over little Absalom's cradle, nor did she teach him to pray as David had been taught. But the sacred historian wrote, "In all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty. From the sole of his foot to the crown of his head, there was no blemish in him." No young man in all the world had a more brilliant prospect than he. His eyes were so darkly hazelled with the promised glory that was before him. He probably inherited his father's intellect, but not his pious and moral principle: and fired with ambition and ingratitude to his loving father he rushed headlong into treason.

VII. Now learn the peril of success. There came a time when David reached the summit of his greatness. He has gained literary prominence. He is the greatest military captain of his age. His nation in a thousand years never produced another statesman that was his equal; surrounding nations are paying him tribute.

Now David, this is your time of special danger! Not when you were facing the lion or the bear! Not when you were confronting huge Goliath. Not when King Saul insane with jealousy is hurling his frowning at you to pin you to the wall, or thrusting you like a partridge on the mountains, your life was in greater danger. It is now, now, when crowned with chaplets of honor and fame and victory, now, when you have won your laurels, and the world is at your feet, that Satan will tempt you with the intoxication of applause. Induce you to forget-prayer and God, and appeal to the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life!

Instead of being away on business of state, as an absolute monarch well might be, inspecting the needs of some province, or even writing one more immortal hymn of praise to God, he suffered his eyes one morning to indulge themselves inspecting the beauty of a lashing Venus! He proved himself to be weak and temptable, just like other men, and fell as numbers of other men have done. Then to hide his sin he ordered Uriah—the godly husband of his victim—to be put in the forefront of the battle that he might be killed.

VIII. But let not David dream for a moment that he can sin with impunity; even though he has been for a generation a favored son of God. Nor indeed! Our holy God does not let even a saint commit presumptuous sin and escape the consequences. He sent the prophet Nathan to have a little interview with David, upon whom already the pangs of hell were hanging low. God said through Nathan, "Thou hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite, and slain him with the sword. Wherefore hast thou despised the word of Jehovah?"

If ever a man repented of a great sin and confessed it publicly, David did, and God answered, "I have put away thy sin, but—Take notice! David is forgiven and saved, but—" Because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of Jehovah to blaspheme... the sword shall never depart from thine house... I will take evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives... and give them unto thy neighbour... Thou didst it secretly; but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun.

The办公, Robb t4pensoll infidels, are still painting the finger of scorn at David's religion and David's God. But the infidels forget his repentance, his pardon, and his punishment. He had sowed sins as seed, and he must reap the awful harvest.

"Tamar was Absalom's twin sister, and doubtless more beautiful than he, which excited the illicit love of his father and caused him to murder her with shame and sin. Absalom avenged his beautiful sister's shame by the murder of Amnon.

Abelom afterward brought on a civil war against his father's throne and life, in which he himself was slain and buried in infamy." Then king Solomon put to death his half-brother, Adonijah. Then Solomon himself imitated his father's sin, and multiplied it a thousandfold by living in a pig-sty of lust, till he damned himself forever.

Young people, it is an awful thing, having once known God's salvation to carelessly and willfully backslide. I have known ten eminent preachers to fall just as David did, from the heights of usefulness to abysmal depths of sin. Three left the ministry; two went insane over their muddy folly. The pangs of hell came upon them all. Sin never pays.

IX. Finally, notice that God chastises His penitent children in love for their profit, "that they may become partakers of his holiness."

David had a thorough overhauling of his spiritual condition. He critically examined himself: Why did I commit these two awful crimes after walking with God from my early childhood? After fasting and meditation and prayer he struck through tears and remorse and self-pity for ever and ever before, and with it a deeper experience. "I saw, I was deeply deceived; I need not only to be forgiven and made a child of God; but I also need to be cleansed by the Holy Spirit and sanctified" (Psalm 51 paraphrased). "Have mercy upon me, O God, acceptable unto thee through Jesus Christ our Lord, and cleanse me from my sin... My sin is ever before me... Behold, I was brought forth in iniquity... Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me... take not thy holy Spirit from me. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation... Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted to thee." The sanctifying and keeping power of the Holy Spirit is the only sure protection for any of us.
Music adds immensely to the power of the sanctuary services. It makes the home delightful and saves it from many degrading influences. Blessed are the young people who discover their gifts and train them to use in the service of God. He boldly said, "I'll fight him." He chose five smooth stones out of the brook and put them in his wallet, and took his staff and his sling and in the name of God went to meet him.

David looked so insignificant in comparison that the bravest heathen cursed him. David modestly answered, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a javelin: but I come to thee in the name of Jehovah of hosts, the God... whom thou hast defied. This day will Jehovah deliver thee into my hand; and I will smite thee, and take thine head off thee, and will give the dead bodies of the host of the Philistines this day unto the bird of the heavens and to the wild beasts of the earth; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel!"

The youth ran toward the giant with perfect confidence, slung a stone with that old unerring aim, which sank into the giant's forehead and he fell on his face to the earth. He then cut off the giant's head with his own sword and still had artillery enough left to kill four more giants. David was not disappointed, neither was God.

Of the Hebrew Bible, only Job, the Five Books of Moses, Joshua, Judges, Ruth and Samuel existed. But this pious youth probably committed all of them to memory. He probably inherited his father's intellect, but not his piety and moral principle: and fired with ambition and ingratitude to his loving father he rushed headlong into treason.

VII. Now learn the peril of success. There came a time when David reached the summit of his greatness. He has gained literary prominence. He is the greatest military captain of his age. His name in a thousand years never produced another statesman that was his equal; surrounding nations are paying him tribute.
I will set mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good (6).

And who is He who will bring this calamity upon the people? He is the Lord of hosts. When He by a simple touch lays hand upon the land, it totters, and the inhabitants thereof are thrown into mourning. At His command the earth is convulsed, rising and falling like the swollen tide of a river. He is who hath built the heavens, and the heavens of the heavens. Over the earth He spreads His vailed sky, and forth from these He pours the rain over all the land. He is the true God of Israel, not the golden calves; He is who now brings judgment upon the people.

Should Israel feel that they were in a peculiar sense the people of the Lord and thereby would not be brought to ruin, yet the word of the prophet comes to them that when it is a question of judgment for sin, will not be favored. Are ye not as the Cushites to me, O children of Israel? saith Jehovah. Brought I not Israel up from the land of Egypt, as the Philistines from Caphtor, and Aram from Kir? (R. V.)

The Israelites stand on the same basis as the Cushites. While they had indeed been brought up from the land of Egypt by Jehovah, yet the movement of the Philistines from Caphtor and Aram from Kir was likewise directed. Here we have set forth a truth which marks the prophet as a man with a vision of truth and reality far beyond his contemporaries. He taught a universal Providence! This was a new truth to his day and generation. The Israelites believed that every nation had its god and Jehovah was their God, but they did not recognize Him as the God of the universe, one whose ruling was supreme even higher than ever from the popular trend of thought. Amos had sent his shafts of invective against the idol worship, then he passes from that to their very conception of Jehovah, a conception which was present in their thinking when once they turned their thought for a little from the golden calves to a pure thought of the Divine Being. Herein also they were deficient. Thus we feel some of the titanic force of the prophet, in whom that berth was achieved with an absoluteness which leaves nothing to be desired. But let us also emphasize that it was by no mere method of the intellect or observation of history that Amos was led to assert the unity of the Divine Providence. The inspiration in this was a moral one: Jehovah was ruler and guide of all the families of mankind, because He was exalted in righteousness; and the field in which that righteousness was proved and made manifest was the life and the fate of Israel. (R. V.)

And let the eyes of the Lord Jehovah Are upon the sinful nation; And I will destroy it utterly, From the face of the ground. (R. V.)

Thus the note of doom so recurrent in the messages of the prophet is sounded once more, but this time there follows a mitigation of the sentence. Hitherto the dark picture has been unrelied, but with his closing words Amos announces that the destruction shall not be full and complete: I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord. The Israelites will be scattered abroad among all the nations of the earth. As corn is tossed to and fro in the sloe, so shall they be among all peoples. They shall lead a restless, tempestuous life, roving about, persecuted, tormented. But with it all the eye of the Lord their God will be upon them, and not one righteous person will fall of the purpose of God. All the sinners, however, will be cut down with the sword, those who had rested assured in self-confidence that no evil would befall them. Herein is the doom suggested of a righteous remnant which becomes a very distinct teaching in the writings of Isaiah. Although the people as a whole had forsaken God, yet, as always, there are some devout souls who keep their faith. Thus even in idolatrous Israel, laden with sin and iniquity, there were still some who trusted in God. These would ever have the protecting care of Providence.

With this thought of a righteous remnant, there is an expanding of the mind's vision under the divine hand of inspiration, and the prophet looks out into the future. He now foretells, how that salvation, of those indeed His own, should be effected through the house of David, in whose line Christ was to come. He speaks of the house of David, not in any terms of royal greatness; he tells, not of its palaces, but of its ruins. Under the word 'tabernacle' he probably blends the ideas that it should be in poor condition, and yet that it should be the means whereby God should protect His people. (R. V.) Not only is this booth or tabernacle of humble men but it is fallen. Under such conditions will the power and might of God intervene and the rifts in its structure will be closed and ruins raised again and restored as days of old. When Israel shall take place, no longer will they be harassed by their neighbors about about, but they shall occupy a position of pre-eminence and bring blessing to the surrounding countries and also to the heathen at large.

Within their own borders the land shall abound in great richness of production. The ground will be so fertile that the plowman has hardly completed the work of plowing and sowing when the grain is ready for harvest, and the vintage will be so plentiful that it will not be completed when the time for plowing comes around again. The vintage will be so bountiful that it will seem to us if the hills themselves were being dissolved into streams of wine. Enter into abundance the captives will be brought back and enjoy the abundance of the yield. They shall dwell within the land as a permanent possession and shall not again be removed; they shall restore all the waste places of the land and till its soil and reap its harvest. Thus does Amos under the familiar figures of his own day and age depict the spiritual blessings that shall come upon the children of God.

In connection with this final message of this prophet, we should review some of the most important lessons. We have not lost the conception of the majesty and power of God mani-
3. Henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind (Eph. 4:17).
4. Walk in love (Eph. 5:2).
5. Walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time (Eph. 5:15).
6. Your feet shod (Eph. 6:15).

Ten Commandments for Church Attendants

A PRAYER FOR A REVIVAL
By U. T. HOSKIN

With thou not revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee! (Ps. 85:6).
Revival means "pertaining to making alive again.

Presupposes conditions of spiritual death. "Millions now living are already dead.*

I. REVIVALS ARE PRECIPITATED BY
1. The intercession of holy people. With right motives, with fervent desire—lusty prayers not availing.
2. Exposition of the Holy Bible. Only solid foundation for faith. Much Bible saves from great illusion and consequent collapse of much that is only psychological manipulation.
3. Special singing will never take the place of preaching.
4. Exhibition of a holy heart and life. Preacher must have samples to show. Inconsistent living makes skeptics.
5. Demonstration of holy joy. More than natural joy of filial affection. Not artificial joy of the pleasures of the world or the effects of intoxicants. The joy of the Lord makes people see their own wretchedness.
6. A manifestation of the Holy Ghost. He manifests Himself through the above channels. He comes only by earnest invitation. He comes not to the rebellious. He works according to our faith.

II. A BIBLE ILLUSTRATION OF A REVIVAL
Ezekiel's Vision (Chap. 37).
1. He saw skeletons: (1) Very dry. (2) Very motionless. (3) Very quiet. (4) Much separated.
2. God tests faith. He does every effort for revival. "Can these bones live?" Ezekiel expressed doubt. "Lord God, thou knowest." He worked faith. Works the test of faith, not your feelings, outlooks or talk. The fact he went to work proved he had some faith. He prophesied.
3. The revival begins: (A noise (v. 7). (2) Shaking (v. 7)—time to hold on, not to run away. (3) A getting together.
4. Regeneration takes place. He calls to the wind and the fiery dew of the Holy Spirit. They revived, i.e., lived. They stood upright—ready to go walk.

III. RESULTS OF A REVIVAL
Peace (Ps. 85:3), Salvation (Ps. 85:9).

IV. The endmost seat thou shalt leave free, For more must share the pew with thee.
V. The offering-plate thou shalt not fear, But give thine untermaster with cheer.
VI. Thou shalt the bulletin peruse, And look there for the church's news.
VII. Thou shalt the minister give heed, Nor hear him while thou'rt disagree.
VIII. Unto thy neighbor thou shalt bend, And if a stranger, make a friend.
IX. Thou shalt in every way be kind, Compassionate, of tender mind.
X. And so, by all thy spirit's grace, Thou shall show God within this place.—JOHN H. HOLMES.

When Dr. Joseph Hardy Neesima was president of the Doshisha University in Kyoto there came a time of great disturbance, teachers and students being at odds. One morning Neesima came to chapel with a cane in his hand. Paul Kanamori, the Japanese evangelist, tells the story of what happened.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I am sorry to see such a disturbance in the school. It is a disgrace to Doshisha. But, as such a disturbance has arisen, we must punish the person or persons responsible for it. So this morning I will punish the offender." Of course everybody supposed he was going to punish the ringleaders of the rioting. But he continued to speak.
The Sinfulness of Sin

In all the United States prisons, inmates convicted for violations of the Federal Narcotic Laws make up thirty-four per cent of the population, while those convicted of all sorts of breaches of the prohibition law only make up fourteen per cent of the (prison) population. In a check-up in the Federal penitentiary at McNeil's Island held recently it was discovered that fifty-six were bootleggers and 896 were drug peddlers. The capture of the books of one dope ring in Chicago showed 18,000 drug addicts among the customers, involving yearly payments of $39,000,000. It is estimated that 52,000 girls from all walks of life disappeared from the homes of the United States last year, and the majority of them went by way of the drug habit. These figures are all for the United States, but many other parts of the world are no better. The League of Nations has reckoned that only 336 tons of opium are needed for all the possible addicts of the world, but 8,000 tons are actually used every year.

And the story of what this consumption does in the inducement to crime, the breaking down of morals and decency, and the break-up of health, shows that this thing is a monster in something more than size. The incalculable suffering in mind and body of those who have tied themselves to this living death is something one cannot think of without a shudder. And the stories that are told of the efforts at reclamation of addicts in institutions, with everything that science can do to help, gives one a terrible idea of the diabolical hold the drug habit can have on a man's very soul.

Mayor Walker, of New York, says, "The dope problem is the biggest one this city has to solve, and so far as I have been able to ascertain from reports from other big cities, the biggest one in those communities too." The whole devilish business of training boys and girls to be dope fiends is something to get excited about. —The New Outlook.

When I See the Blood

In 1893 at the World's Fair in Chicago a great Parliament of Religions was held. The apostles of the East presented their arguments and showed that they had spoken beautifully of their philosophies. Edward Everett Hale had expounded Unitarianism. The plea for the gospel of Jesus Christ was made by Joseph Cook. In the course of his great address he turned to the men on the platform, who had already spoken, and said, "Gentlemen, I beg to introduce you to a woman who has a great sorrow. She has blood stains on her hands, and, do what she will, she cannot wash them out. She has been driven to desperation in her distress, and in the hours of the long night she has cried out, 'Out, damned spot, out damned spot!' but it will not out, for it is the blood of a murder. Is there anything in your philosophies or religions that will tell this woman how to get rid of her great sin?' From one to another of the representatives he seemed to turn as though he expected an answer to his question. Then he added, "You have said nothing that tells us how the stain of sin can be washed from a human life." Then lifting his eyes he said, "I will ask another: John, can you tell this woman how she can get rid of her awful sin?" He waited for a moment as though waiting for an answer from the unseen. Then he said, "Listen! John is speaking—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." That is the answer to the question.—Selected.

The Preacher's Magazine
earth by such cares, yet frequently rise above them, and preach the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; and who enter into the assembly as if they had not a single anxiety connected with the contingency of the church.

I have known ministers who have substituted eloquent preaching and well-studied sermons, for prayer-meetings after preaching, frequent exhortations, personal conversations with sinners, vigorous efforts for the conversion of pennies, and the co-operation of good preachers and leaders in such meetings; but I have ever yet observed splendor of talent and plausory of pulpit imagery make up for the absence of these powerful auxiliarys to a gospel ministry. Whereas, I have noticed men whose talents and learning were far inferior crowned with the most abundant success by the employment of the helps to which I have just alluded.

It is, however, to be feared that some repose overmuch confidence in prayer-meetings, etc., and too little in the preached word; as if more could not be converted in these means than during the delivery of the gospel message. This is to be regretted; for surely it would, seem a most fit and proper time for God to save sinners during the preaching of the same. Now we have many现象 of salvation. But let it be remembered that others run to the very opposite extreme; and if they do not scrunt the idea of a prayer-meeting, are seldom, if ever, seen in one. So far from staying to manage such a service, they disappear from the congregation as if their work is finished in the pulpit.

Now I think those preachers are most successful who unite both means together; who do not put another what God hath joined—faithful, pointed, searching preaching, preceded and followed by the effectual fervors of many righteous men. We are to wield the tremendous truths of God upon the consciences of sinners and to offer them salvation just as we, through faith in the blood of the Lamb.

III. EVANGELICAL PREACHING

See to it that your own soul is a flame of love to God and man. Cry earnestly unto God for a baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost. Without this you may preach 'hell and damnation' as you please, but you will have little success among sinners. It is not by the terrors of the law of God, but by offers of mercy through the atonement, we are to win men. Not that you are to neglect the law; it has its use, but beyond a certain point it cannot go. "As the flame in the bush," says a writer, "made the thorns visible without consuming them, so the fiery law discovers men's sins, but does not abolish them."

The whole," remember, "need not a physician, but they that are sick." Let sinners be wounded first, but let you attempt to cure them. This is the great cause of inefficient preaching; some men are all honesty, all kindness and mercy; they expatiate most eloquently and ingeniously upon the nature and extent of the atonement, and the willingness of God to save sinners; yet you hear of very few souls converted under your ministry. The gospel, as they preach it, needs a John the Baptist going before to prepare the way, crying, "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth, therefore, fruits meet for repentance."

When such a messenger has aroused the careless to a concern for their souls, or broken them down into repentance and inflicted deep wounds in their bleeding consciences, then these "kind and winning preachers" may have snout success in the free and full declaration of the Gospel plan.

He is, however, the ablest minister of the New Testament, who has that combination of talent within himself necessary for "breaking down and building up;" such as was manifest in our Savior's preaching—"Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?"

Wherefore, if they hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to pluck one of thine eyes rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."

"Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."
THE YOUNGER GENERATION

By W. G. SCHURMAN

I SUPPOSE it is customary for a man when he gets old to deplore the rapid life of the younger set, and I think there always has been a tendency for old folks to view the oncoming generation with more or less mingled horror and suspicion. Then I think there is a tendency on the part of many to feel that the world is gradually getting worse and worse. That may also be the result of old age, and though I know I will hear the cry raised, "Schurman is getting old," yet I will not shrink from speaking out my convictions where a principle is involved. I was talking to one of the young people in the church recently as to the course he should pursue relative to his school life, and how he ought to talk to his teacher and tell him he could not conform to such things because he was a Christian. I said, "I believe the teacher will respect you and listen very carefully to your reason for not desiring to indulge in that exercise." He said, "Why Brother Schurman, you do not know what you are talking about. I have heard the teacher swear at the pupils, and call them a -- ap for showing no more signs of intelligence." That got me to thinking. In the town in which I was born, no one was permitted to teach school who did not make a profession of religion, or at least whose standards were of the highest. A school teacher's job would not be worth thirty cents if he was heard to swear or use any vulgarity, either in the presence of his pupils or among his friends. I remember when I was superintendent of a Sunday school in New Hampshire, they used to have a school teacher teach one of our classes who made no profession of religion, but had the highest standard of Christian ethics that a man could possibly have without a Christian experience. I think the only thing he ever did that a Nazarene was not supposed to do was to go to where he called a high-class show two or three times a year.

I have known in my day lawyers and judges who sat on the bench who made no profession of religion but who attended church and whose ideals were of the highest, but I am not sure if I have any school teachers who teach my child, and perhaps yours, who smoke cigarettes, commonly use swear words, attend vulgar shows and desecrate God's day. No one would care to dispute when I say there are lawyers whose chief aim seems to be to defeat justice for filthy lucre's sake, and judges who can be bought for a trifling sum to see that justice does not get a chance. I say I don't suppose anyone would care to deny these statements. I know they are strong but they are true. Then the preacher who is supposed to teach morality is sometimes immoral himself. For the last two or three months the daily press has made particular mention of two prominent preachers who have gotten into the front page because of scandal. No less a personage than Sherwood Eddy recently made a statement at a preacher's meeting in Chicago that the preacher's theme is sin and its cure.

I am sincere when I say that I believe the average man is living in an age when the moral standard has been so lowered that people are no more ashamed when they do wrong, and that certainly is not a healthy condition. When a man or woman is ashamed of his sins there is some hope for him, but when he is shameless, he has certainly stepped down in the moral scale, and money today seems to be able to purchase entrance into any society, and do not know that it is so, but it is openly reported here in Chicago that Al Capone's picture appeared on the screen in a local theater, and the crowd cheered and howled as they do for the President of the United States or some other prominent person.

I have a friend who follows the habit of picking up hitch-hikers and giving them a ride. One night, coming past Lincoln Field, he stopped to give a respectable looking young man a lift into the city of Chicago. The young man assumed himself to my friend, telling him that he was an auto thief, and belonged to a big ring that bought automobiles in Illinois and sold them in California, or some other western state. The automobiles used by California would be sold in Illinois or some other eastern state. He said it was a regular profession. The syndicate, or ring, gave him $25.00 for every car he delivered into their hands, whether it was a Ford or a Packard. The man, while not a graduate of college, had attended for two or three years of our local schools. Lincoln Field, and when my friend talked to him about religion being able to save from sin and make honest men of dishonest men, he seemed to be surprised. He had religion himself, claimed to have gone to mass nearly every Sunday morning, and yet here he was making his living by preying on society. He made his boast that he moved in the best of society, had many girl friends of the best families, and yet he had served time in two penitentiaries, and was a professional auto thief.

This lends me to say what I started to say, that in my boyhood days there seemed to be a religious background in the moral fiber of the younger people to which a minister could appeal in his sermon, but the teaching of the schools has taken away the children's faith in the Word of God, and leaves the preacher in the position where he has to teach the average boy or girl pretty near what the missionary has to teach the pagan. In other words, there is no sin consciousness, seemingly, in the hearts of many of the young people of today; and this very condition makes me feel that the minister has the greatest opportunity today in the world of winning souls to Jesus Christ. He has a special promise in Scripture. Here it is: "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." Charles G. Finney said this means when sin is running rampant that is the preacher's time to look to God and the Word to change the condition of society, and we should preach the Word with no uncertain sound. If men are really lost and need but to die to be damned, then we must first feel their lost condition, then we are in a lost condition; worn them of the damnable nature of sin, and then present the remedy.

THE CHURCH OF THE NAZARENE DRAFTING?

I was recently considerably startled in reading an article in a Sunday school periodical in which the writer attempted to hold up the virtues of local gatherings among the young people. Now, don't misunderstand me. No one is more-desirous of encouraging the young people to seek proper social recreation. I was taken "to do" some time ago for making the public statement that some people's god seemed to be their belly. I was told that the language was unbecoming a minister standing in the pulpit, but I answered by saying that I was merely quoting Scripture, and that as a matter of fact, too many are rapidly getting to the place where their god is their belly, and you can coax them to a religious or semi-religious gathering by offering them something to eat far more quickly...

sound bright, but will not stand the test under careful investigation. In the first place, a train needs a brakeman just as much as it needs a fireman. Of course it would be bad business for the brakeman to work on the brakes when the train is running at grade, but it would be equally as disastrous for the fireman to pile on coal to make steam on the down grade. We need neither fanaticism nor formulism, and as sure as you live, we are in danger of both unless the fireman and the brakeman can work in their proper place. Someone has said that a fanatic is one who expects the end without the means. I feel the religion of Jesus Christ is the most practical and sensible thing in the world, and ought to appeal to the mind of man as well as the heart.

It has been my fortune or misfortune to have been pastor always where someone has come along with some revamped doctrine to get the attention of the people—one who will make statements that cannot be verified by either facts or reason. When the train is running away, the brakeman can be a real blessing, and when people are being carried away by hooks and preaching that will rob man of the experience he has enjoyed for years, and the people are deceived into thinking that they are getting something better than they ever had, it is time for the brakeman to apply the brakes, and I propose to be that man when there is necessity for such.

Mr. Finney used to say that when he went to a church where people were standing around waiting for the Spirit of God to save them without any effort on their part to follow the demands of Holy Writ, he would keep thudding on such texts as "Make unto thyself a new heart," "Wreak the Lord while you may be found," "Return unto me and I will return unto you," but when he found a people who were cursed with the teaching that they could come to the Lord when they desired, and reject, as they pleased, he would open his Gatling guns on them from Scripture that would present God as a Sovereign, and to the countless millions of pagans as they are prone to bestow upon their own pleasures.

Think of this over now, brother, and see if I am not right.

The Gospel Train

I recently heard a man giving his testimony who said that the gospel train did not need any brakeman, but rather one hundred firemen to pile on coal and raise steam to climb the grade. I think we frequently say a lot of things that than you can get them to congregate to worship the Lord.

In the early days of the holiness movement we were told that the baptism with the Holy Ghost cured the recipient from indulging in and pampering carnal appetites. I am still inclined to believe that. I am as sincere as I know how to be when I say that in the church we keep that place where it has to coax Christian people to their line of duty by feeding their stomach—rather than appealing to a lost world, that church is a fallen church, I care not by what name it goes.

This article to which I refer gave the impression that the preacher carrying on of the social life by the church would put the classrooms out of business. That is the biggest piece of bunk that was ever advocated. It was because the old line churches had gone to seed on church suppers, fairs, festivals and so-called social doings that Dr. Breeze said, "God raised up the Church of the Nazarenes to Christianize Christianity."

I think the social life needs attention and direction. But I do not think it needs too much encouragement or approval to steal for its life very much. We will naturally run that way anyway. Nowhere in the Scripture does the Lord tell us to love ourselves. He knew we would. There is no law against it nor does the Lord thunder at it. He simply says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." I can love my neighbor as himself, he will be cured from selfishness. If he does not, he is ruined, and if he does not look after his spiritual life as much as he does his social life, he will be ruined.

Our young folks do not need much encouragement to go in for social affairs. It may need to be directed by someone, but I am sure it does not need to be directed to steal for its life very much. What need is there that can imperative upon our young people the necessity of as deep a devotion and consecration to the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ and to the countless millions of pagans as they are prone to bestow upon their own pleasures. I think this over now, brother, and see if I am not right.

The Quest of Feeling

I heard a man the other night in prayer-meeting make the statement that we should constantly feed the power of God in our lives. I think the feeling business has been overdone in our religious meetings and our services where testimony is given. It is very misleading, and if not properly understood is destructive to the faith of some people. I certainly believe in heartfelt religion, but we are not saved because we feel saved. We are saved through faith in Jesus Christ. May I illustrate that with a simple illustration. Here is a mother in the backyard of a home where a huge dog is chained. The mother holds in her arms a child, and while there is a little temptation to fear on the part of the child, she feels safe while in the mother's arms. The moment the mother puts the child on the ground and steps away from it, not even though the dog is tied securely and cannot reach the child by the distance of ten feet, that feeling of safety is gone, and the child begins to whine in fear until the mother again picks it up in her arms, when the child feels secure. But the child was just as safe in the backyard ten feet away from the chained dog as it was in the arms. It is not any more safe in the mother's arms—it only feels safer, and I am fearful that we are too prone to go by feeling.

We need to teach people that they are saved not because they feel saved, but because their faith is in Jesus Christ, and they are walking in obedience. God would scare them, but the sacred writer said, "They overcome by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony." I recently read a little article that interested me very much on the question of suffering. It said there was an argument among physicians as to which stood the greatest suffering, the person who suffered by disease or the one who suffered by mental pain. There was a division of opinion. One man made the statement that to suffer in the mind was a hundred times worse than to suffer in the body. They asked him to prove it, and he took this unique method of doing it. He took two young lambs. He broke the leg of one, put it in a cage, put food in front of it and left it there all night. He took another lamb and tied it in a cage with a tiger, the latter also being tied, and in such a way that it could not possibly reach the lamb, and left it there all night. In the morning it was found that the lamb with the broken leg had eaten the food set before it, although it must have suffered excruciating pain from its broken limb, but in going to the other cage they found the lamb dead from sheer fright.

Satan's job is to make the children of God afraid, and if he can get us to look at our feelings, he will be bound to win a victory over us. If I know I am obeying the Lord implicitly, I need have no fear. The sacred writer said, "I will not fear; what can man do unto me?" Our faith is not against man, but against the world. I told him that he would not worry. The longer I live the more satisfied I am that the whole secret of Christian living is summed up in three words, "Trust and obey," or may I reverse the order and say, "Obey and trust?" The poet has said:

"Trust and obey; for there's no other way
To be happy in Jesus, but to trust and obey."

Mmeorizing Scripture

In a recent evangelistic campaign, we were struck with the tremendous amount of scripture that the evangelist injected into his message. He would back up every statement by a quotation from scripture and drew his illustrations from the Word of God. By experience we have learned that no illustration is more telling on a congrega-

PSYCHOLOGY FOR THE MINISTER

By BAKI W. MILLER

The Psychology of Crowds and the Minister

I N THE minister's dealing with souls much of his work is accomplished among crowds, or groups of individuals. However great stress he lays on "individual work for individuals," the personal contact, and personal evangelism, still he must realize that his is a task of the first magnitude of "mass production." He meets the group for conference. He delivers his addresses to congregations. He preaches to audiences. He leads the church; those membership runs from a few souls even up to six and eight thousands—largest in Christendom. Hence it is necessary for every preacher to understand those psychological laws, which dominate crowd thought and group reactions. Let us then briefly in some twenty boldly stated laws or principles outline "crowd psychology" as applied to the task of the ministry.

Law 1. Every crowd presents a collective mind, and has a mental state. Whenever the minister meets a group of people for discussion or business, he is dealing with the crowd mind, and not with the aggregate of the individual minds, nor with an individual mind. When the preacher arises on Sunday morning to bring "the message of the hour" he speaks not to so many individuals, but to a unified, collective mind.

Law 2. This collective mind makes the crowd an audience feel, think and act in a manner different from that in which the isolated individual would do. Hence the minister must remember that his talk and his actions and the different form in which he will, if dealing with one person, or with the persons of the audience one by one, the reasoning power of an audience is less than that of the various individuals separately thinking. There is a contact which is formed by the proximity of the persons with each other which is responsible for this lowering of the reasoning power.

Law 3. In a crowd or an audience in terms of the minister's field, every sentiment and act is highly contagious. This is true that the individual will sacrifice his personal sentiment for that of the audience. This contagion can be illustrated by the "ripple of laughter" or the wave of tender emotions which every minister has witnessed pass over his congregations. What is put into this crowd through the work of the preacher's voice or actions soon fills the audience.

Law 4. All crowds are highly suggestive. The thinking of the group mind is furnished by the leader and when certain facts are presented these suggestions hold of the audience, and grip it with a great power. In each case the source of the emotion is the usual action of the speaker, which takes hold of an individual or two, and from them the emotion sweeps on through suggestion until it seizes the entire group. The spell of mighty revival is brought on by this dynamic of suggestion. The Spirit of God touches a few individuals; the minister is enabled to arouse them to action, and soon others follow their example. The reaction on the audience is powerful, and others follow the suggestion and arise to go. This power of suggestion is highly contagious. If the minister is able to reach a few of his congregation who are leaders with this suggestion, his talk, the Spirit of God touches a few individuals; the minister is enabled to arouse them to action, and soon others follow their example. The reaction on the audience is powerful, and others follow the suggestion and arise to go. This power of suggestion is highly contagious. ing we must be definite in our convictions, clear-cut in our statements, speaking with such a sentiment of divine unction that none can doubt our sincerity. It is here that the modern pulpit falls short of the power of "the princes of the pulpit" of our yesterdays. They spoke of judgment, and reasoning with men about eternity. We are prone to "scare up dust," and deliver heartless literary essays on doubtful moral obligations. Whenever the minister faces his congregation with anything less than a sense of divine conviction, "the crowd" is not impressed. Violence in sentiments and emotions in the pulpit does not necessarily play violent and moral demonstration, but it does carry with it that "convictions flaring into flame," aroused emotions which flash the face and sparkle through the eyes. The evangelist, coming to move men immediately, finds that violence in emotions and stirring appeals produce results most easily. He is but putting the above named law into action.

Law 6. Ideas suggested to an audience are effective only when they assume an absolute, uncompromising and simple shape. The most successful ministers follow this principle in their simplicity. Note the elements entering into this law: First, there must be an absoluteness about our message. It cannot be a doubtful story of duty and obligation, playfully developed for present-day living which we bring to our churches when gathered in audiences. If it is, never can we carry the suggestion into action in the life of the group. The message, moreover, must be uncompromising in its note. If the minister fights evil, he can never let down in this task. He must stand by his convictions and labor for his beliefs. They simply must mark each suggestion. Every sermon is a suggestion to be embedded in the collective or group mind, and carried into action. When it is not simple the suggestion is lost.

Here the modern pulpit has a vital lesson to learn. To sound the dubious note, or to cover the simple truth we wish to convey in high-sounding activities which they do not appreciate, dooms that suggestion to immediate death. The short sentence carries a note of authority which no other can avail itself of. The simple word, the direct appeal, as barbed arrows strike the collective mind and demand action. This has been the stronghold of famous orators. They knew how to carry a simple message through direct appeals, and uncompromising truth to their audiences. Here Moody was at his best. His was one story to tell. He did not doubt its need nor absoluteness, and with convictions at white heat he carried it to the world of sinners. The late Torrey, a Ph. D. from a German university, a great writer and one of the most learned biblical scholars of his day, laid aside all this wisdom and brought a simple, direct, uncompromising gospel message in his evangelistic meetings.

Law 7. The leader of an audience, or hero of a crowd, must fit into the life of that audience or crowd. Great leaders have never attempted to be anything but the hero of their group. They have appealed directly to the sentiments, desires, traditions, and wishes of the crowd. Napoleon said, "It was by becoming a Catholic that I terminated the Vendee war, by becoming a Musulman that I obtained a footing in Egypt, by becoming an Ultramontane that I won over the Italian priests, and had I to govern a nation of Jews I would rebuild Solomon's temple." He made his strongest contact with the imagination of the group with whom he labored. It was for this reason that Lincoln so easily became an immortal leader—he fit so perfectly into the life of our nation. Ofttimes is a size of our great leaders, that he writes or says things "just as we always felt them.

Here many pastors are wrecked. The minister, a young theologian, with a head full of theories, a heart moved by fancies, "sitting on the edge of a cloud and flinging his feet" in his sermons, feels and acts as though he were above his congregation. He preaches "out of books" and dwells in a realm of unreality, and never comes down and "mingles with those of more common dust." The true leader in every case must know the traditions, sentiments, wishes and soul longings of his crowd, his parishioners, and fit perfectly into them. To dress as the audience does not desire, to speak "over their heads," to engage in activities which they do not appreciate, to cut contraswise to their traditions or beliefs spoils every suggestion the minister may desire to carry over to his audience. The admonition must be: "Dress, act, live, think, believe, as the congregation does and you will fit into its ways, and be their leader. But go contrary to these and your authority will be short-lived.

Law 8. The crowd or audience is controlled by its imagination, and to move the audience the minister must capture this imagination. This is accomplished by the minister through graphic, starting, marvelous word pictures. Le Bon writes, "Whatever strikes the imagination of crowds presents itself under the shape of a starting and very clear image, freed from all superfluous explanation, or nearly having the accompaniment of marvelous or mysterious facts; examples in point are a great victory, a great miracle, a great crime, or a great hope." (The "Crowd," p. 78.) Lindnerff is an example of striking the imagination of the crowd, which was that of the city. The popular revival movements, where healings take place, strike the same response. The old saying that nothing succeeds like success is another way of bringing out this fact. The minister must learn how to present to his audience his messages, devoid of details, graphic word pictures, which will capture this collective imagination. The reason why the theater and the movie have made such appeals to the world both today and through the centuries is because of the fact that they present graphic scenes which play upon the imagination. One theater manager often has found it necessary to protect his "villains" from the violence of the audience after the play is over. The imagination was captured. To capture this imagination, illustrations are vital. Sometimes examples of the point at issue arouse the emotions sooner than a thousand words of harangue. What reasoning cannot do, a graphic, telling story will achieve, when it comes to touching the imagination and hence reaching the emotions of the audience.

Law 9. An appeal to the traditions of the crowd or audience never fails to influence the imagination of the group. The minister who labors among fundamental churches has but to go back in his memory when some aged brother arose and pleaded for "the old paths," naming three or four of the elementary conceptions of the church. It is here that emotions are at the highest tension. To touch these traditions when they are being cast off by other groups, doubted by some other audiences, and even mocked by them, is a certain method of reaching the heart of the audience. No better "point of contact" between any minister and his audience can be found than these basic traditions of that group. The psalm singing United Presbyterians respond immediately to a reference or a message on "The Shiloh Pledge," those who hold to the observance of "the tongues, movement," respond to a reference to Pentecost with their peculiar connotation of speaking in an unknown language or tongue. "Second blessing holiness" of a meeting tends to establish the leadership of the minister. Successful leaders of popular meetings have discovered that concerted action on the part of the audience during the early moments of the service tends to establish the leadership of the minister, and to prepare the way for future concerted or mass activity. Many things can be done to achieve this action. We stand and sing, mute in prayer, raise the Lord's Prayer together, raise our hands and sing, pray the Lord on our "instruments of ten strings" together. All of these activities in which the congregation acts together unify it, and produces what is termed a psychological crowd, or one with a group or collective mind. The more ways as those above the minister can have the congregation join together in doing things, the easier it is for him to lead them to function unitely later on. This is especially true when it comes to making decisions. When altar calls or consecration "meetings" are in process, the minister usually has the crowd raising their hands together, march down the aisle and give them their hand, etc., and finally through the means of these group reactions, he can touch the heart of a individual. A good rule to follow in producing results at the close of the sermon when men are "come to the altar," "seek the Lord," "present themselves for baptism," "join the church," etc., is to lead the group in a way that is such a manner as not to break the spell of the sermon, do unified things which are easily done, as to raise the hands if they want to go to heaven, and then lead on to the final decision to give themselves to Christ. These easier united actions pave the way for the final decision. Contagion alone, when the Spirit of God moves on a meeting, tends to bring people to this final step of acceptance.

Law 15. In any public service the minister, to lead the group, must be the master of the situation. The congregation does no original thinking for itself. Its thoughts must be given by the minister. The minister must master the crowd for himself by uniting the thoughts of the leaders. Roy L. Smith says that the leader of a mob is the man who has attracted its attention and offered it an idea. This is what the minister must do. "No man can capture a crowd who is not mentally and aware of every movement within his congregation," he writes (Capturing Crowds, p. 69). Since crowds tend to act as units, once the minister is able to get the congregation within his control individual wills are under his spell. For this purpose a smile, or a word of encouragement as a reward when the congregation reacts to the preacher's suggestion, is very helpful.

It is well for the preacher to keep out of view of the congregation until the service begins. His entrance is then more in the manner of a surprise than otherwise, and he captures the attention of the group. Some of the outstanding orators wait until just before they are to speak, and then walk on to the stage. They are greeted with an applause. Their entrance was a surprise. Pastors of the leading churches have found that the same is true with reference to their work. Their task is that of securing attention, of making everything of the service contribute to this end. They must have the spotlight thrown upon themselves in order to master or dominate the meeting.

Likewise to dominate an audience every part of the service must present one idea. Smith writes, "If a preacher has been able to present one idea to an audience, he has done a superb job. It will be the times the service scatters. The music presents one idea, the sermon another, the special features present another. The most effective service is one which hammers at one idea until it is driven deep into the hearts of the people" (Op. cit., p. 72). This means the fotwen to arouse action. Numerous acts and their _im tainment. The congregation must look upon him as a sympathizer with them in their difficulties. He must know what he wants to achieve, clearly outline his objective, and his program for attaining this objective, and have the capacity of organizing his workers, and carry through to a successful termination his plans and organization. He cannot afford to be a dreamer who lays plans, but does not execute them. (4) Finally this demands that the minister be successful in his efforts to arouse the congregation to such a pitch that they are willing to follow him in any undertaking. Yes, success is the best success, or the best way to succeed. When the congregation can always feel that the leader succeeds in his work or plans, they will be willing to follow. But one failure lowers the prestige of the minister, breaks that magic spell, and he loses his place of leadership. It is a better policy to undertake less and carry it through successfully than to fail in a few undertakings, though one accomplish a great deal in their failures. Once the spell of leadership is broken, nothing can rebuild it.

Law 14. Mass or group action in the early part knot he will not be able to move the audience.
(4) The preacher as far as possible must avoid all distractions of attention from himself and his message.
(5) Finally, as Jowett writes, let the preacher be a wooer of his crowd. The "snare of the serpent" will fall in producing psychical fusion or mental union in the audience, while the wooer will arouse the emotions, and create religious sentiments that bring the minds of the congregation into a unity.
Jowett writes, "Go back to your woeing days, think of all the little devices...employed in order to woo the affections of the one you loved. Think too, of the little tendernesses paid, and the kindly services rendered, even when the ficklest responses seem to be a republican...Every great preacher is a wooer...We need to woo our people. Let us speak a little more tenderly, let us drop out the thunder and put in the restraint, and where the thunder has failed the lover may succeed" (Apostolic Optimism, pp. 273, 274).

* Note: it is seen that this article deals entirely with the psychological elements, the human devices, and does not speak of the divine elements, such as the human agency, the supernatural power of God in dealing with men. The human and divine phases are correlated by the minister in moving men.

DEPARTMENT OF EXCHANGES AND SUGGESTIONS

BY D. SHELLAY CORLETT

BIBLE SUNDAY

It is quite customary to observe the first Sunday in December as Universal Bible Sunday. This is fostered by the American Bible Society for the purpose of bringing their work before the church. But it also gives the pastor an excellent opportunity to preach on the Bible, and to bring his congregation to a new appreciation of its worth. We do not need a message in the way of defense of the Bible, but rather the issues of today demand a positive statement of fact concerning its inspiration, its message and its authority. The best way to preach on these facts of Christian faith which are being attacked today is not to recognize that anyone doubts what is being said, but preach it as if everybody should believe it just as you present it. Of course this demands

Theme—Jesus Crowded Out.
Text—"There was no room for them, in the inn" (Luke 2:7).

WATCH-NIGHT

It is a custom to observe the closing hours of the old year in a Watch-Night service. There are numerous ways in which to conduct such a service, but owing to the exceptionally lengthy time used it is best to have a great variety with several brief intermissions. One portion of the service may be used in personal testimony; taking a retrospective view of the year, encouraging a personal examination of what the year has meant to the individuals, and what they have in prospect for the coming year. In the nature of the case this cannot be a "popcorn" service, yet those speaking should be encouraged to be brief. Another portion of the service may be used by those having charge of the different departments of the church: the Sunday school superintendent, W. F. M. S. president, N. Y. P. S. president, chairman of the board of stewards, the pastor, and others in local leadership, in which they will outline some plans for work during the new year. A service of this kind may be of great benefit to the program of the local church. The pastor or some visiting preacher should give a sermon during the occasion. The Watch-Night service should have a fine evangelistic appeal. There are those who have become lukewarm, others who have backslidden, perhaps others who have not been converted or sanctified, who may be challenged to make things right before entering the New Year. Encourage all to enter the New Year with victory.

CHRISTMAS

The pastor has a wonderful opportunity to counteract much of the commercialized aspect of Christmas by emphasizing the true Christmas message. Also it gives opportunity to stress such important themes as the Virgin Birth, the Deity of Christ, and the Incarnation. No pastor should permit the Christmas season to pass without preaching a special message on the event which is being commemorated—the Birth of Jesus.

Theme—The Greatest Christmas Gift.
Text—"For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (2 Corinthians 8:9).

Theme—The True Meaning of Christmas—The Incarnation.
Text—"That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:33).

Theme—The Purpose of Jesus' Birth.
Text—"Thou shalt call his name JESUS; for he shall save his people from their sins" (Matthew 1:21).

TWO USEFUL BOOKS

Recently two very fine and useful books for the preacher have fallen into our hands. One is entitled, SERMON HEARTS. It is exactly what its name implies, for it presents the gist or "heart" of one hundred and fifty sermons. This book is compiled by William H. Leech. It contains notable sermons of the great preachers of our day and yesterday reduced to sixty hundred word outlines. It covers the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and includes sermon hearts of preachers from Wesley to Chappell. A book of 326 pages, selling for $2.00 at our own Publishing House.

Barron's Answers, by Roy L. Smith, is the other book which we found to be very interesting, This book offers fifty sermons on various subjects by the author but boiled down to around six hundred words each. Dr. Smith has the reputation of "having a unique way of saying a volume of thought in a single sentence." This book is filled with "seed thoughts" and any preacher will find it a valuable addition to his library. Priced at only $1.50 from our own Publishing House.

A VALUABLE CONTRIBUTION

FUNDAMENTAL CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY, by Dr. A. M. Hills is perhaps the most valuable contribution made to holiness literature during this decade. Dr. Hills has the reputation of being one of the outstanding holiness preachers and teachers of this day. He has trained more successful holiness preachers than any living professor. His years of experience as a teacher of theology, his keensight of insight into present day conditions, his thorough scholastic training, and his work as a successful preacher thoroughly qualify him to write such a theological treatise. This work is in two volumes. Volume one sells for $7.00, or $3.50 each; and half-leather binding sells for $8.00, or $4.00 each. Convenient payment terms may be arranged by ordering them through our own Publishing House.

SYMPTOMS OF A DECLINING STATE.

To be read and pondered on the knees alone with God.

1. When you grow bolder, with sin, or with temptations to sin, than you were in your more watchful state.

2. When you make light of those sins and infirmities which once seemed grievous and almost intolerable to you.

3. When you settle down to a course of Christian life that gives you but little labor, and leave out the hard and costly part.

4. When your God and Savior grows a little strange to you, and your religion consists in conversing with men and their books, and not with God and His Word.

5. When you delight more in hearing and talking, than in secret prayer and the Word.

6. When you read the Word more as a matter of duty, than as food in which your soul delights.

7. When you regard too much the eye of man, and too little the eye of God.
8. When you grow hot and eager about some disputed point, or in forwarding the interests of some party of Christians, more than about those matters which concern the great cause of Christ.
9. When you grow harsh and bitter toward those who differ from you, instead of feeling tenderly toward all who love Christ.
10. When you make light of preparing for the Lord’s day, and the Lord’s Supper, and think more of outward ordinances than you do of heart work.
11. When the joys of heaven and the love of God do not interest you, but you are training after worldly enjoyment and growing eager for it.
12. When the world grows sweeter to you and death and eternity are distasteful subjects.

All these are sure symptoms of a declining state.—Marching Orders.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

In the Presbyterian church, and to a degree in all the Christian churches, the relation between pastor and people is very unique. We know that there may be in our social structure quite like it. In the first place, the pastor is invited to the pastorate. He may have had more or less to do with bringing about the call. Usually, however, in our church the pastor has very little to do with it. Some men for good and sufficient reasons may desire a call, but to “go after it” as men seek public offices is very rare. In the second place, he comes to a position, made for him. The physician and lawyer and merchant must build up their clientele, but the pastor finds it ready and waiting. In the third place, he is by formal contract promised such care and provision as will make for his comfort, and in addition a stipulated salary. Others, like teachers, have salaries promised by the public, but the promise to do all that is necessary for comfort is not included. In the fourth place, he receives immediate social acceptance, and usually is permitted to share personal and family secrets which are not generally. These are special favors and privileges which even the apostles did not have in the same measure.

Privilege involves responsibility. Ministers are very liable to take these things as a matter of course or to demand them as a right. When that happens the highest type of relation becomes impossible, and the minister’s work will not be as fruitful as it otherwise might have been. We have seen a potentially happy and successful pastor killed at the very start by a wrong attitude on the part of the minister. People should also be careful to fulfill their part. Having of their own volition invited a man to the pastorate, they are in duty bound to prevent him from regretting it. A cordial welcome, some delicate, appropriate attentions, ministry to his material necessities, do much to bring success. He is, as it were, a guest to be made to feel the hospitality. The first six months will do much to determine what the rest will be. Many are assuming new pastorates just now and these words may be fitting.—Editorial in The Presbyterian.

THERE IS A VAST DIFFERENCE

Bect being sorry for sin, and sorry because your sin is found out;
Between confessing your sin, and confessing some other person’s sins;
Between seeing your own faults, and seeing some other person’s faults;
Between conversion of the head and conversion of the heart;
Between being led by the Holy Ghost and being led by your own imagination;
Between the spirit of meekness and the spirit of indifference;
Between suffering for Jesus’ sake and suffering for your own ungodly work;
Between persecution for Christ’s sake and persecution for your own hypocrisy;
Between contending for the faith, and striving for your own opinions;
Between the shout of victory, and the yell of triumph;
Between preaching “the Word of God”; and preaching some man’s opinions.
Between being hid away with Christ in God, and being caught in the devil’s fly-trap.—Arthur Seecknow.

LIBERALISM RESPONSIBLE FOR LOSSES

Losses in church membership in the United States during the past year are directly attributable to liberalism. Harold Paul Sloan, editor of Christian Faith and Life, says it in a recent issue. From Prof. George H. Bette’s volume, “The Beliefs of Seven Hundred Ministers,” he finds that the order of the denominations with respect to their liberalism is as follows:

Congressional: 36 per cent;
Methodist: 34 per cent;
Presbyterian: 32 per cent;
Episcopal: 27 per cent;
Baptist: 22 per cent;
Lutheran: 16 per cent.

In the case of the Episcopalians, liberal theology is often so far advanced that it is difficult to see what is the source of their growth. In the case of the Baptists and Lutherans, who are the most conservative of the group, it is clear that the growth is due to the spreading of the liberal doctrines among them. The Presbyterian and Methodist churches, which are next in number, show a marked increase in the number of members who subscribe to liberal beliefs.

GREAT THEMES AND GREAT PREACHING

A certain minister was in the habit of selecting great themes for his sermons. He felt that his people should be led to think along the great lines of the gospel. He said that if he could not be eloquent he could be instructive, and so he put into each sermon some great truths and facts, so that they might be a teacher, valuable, helpful and stimulating, even if he could not be sparkling and famous. With great earnestness and studiousness and conscientiousness, he worked, from week to week, and from year to year, and the people listened to him gladly, because they knew he would always have something to listen to that was worth while. He never neglected his preaching. He felt that this was one of the greatest duties and joys of his life. He put his heart and his prayers into his work, and the people came to realize the great preacher was one of the great preachers of the day.

One thing he was very particular about, and that was to select great and appropriate texts. Let there be no mistake here. We may say, and say truthfully: "Every word of God is pure." But, for all that, there are some very great texts, and a great many of them, and each one should be selected, for its particular occasion, with great care, and emphasized with all possible force, when it is used. The sermon may be forgotten, or much of it, if but the text is lodged in the minds of the hearers, they will be much richer, in a very great way. The preacher who can plant great texts in the minds of his people is a great and valuable instrument.

A preacher whom we once knew was a very pleasant gentleman, and had considerable attractiveness. But he never made much impression as a preacher, and, in fact, never filled a large place as a preacher of the gospel. He took little themes, almost inconsequent, on small points of behavior, or everyday conduct, and did very little in the way of instruction or of stimulating faith. He did not seem to have the conception of the fact that he was sent out from the Lord with any direct or constraining message. He conducted each service in a quiet, insipid way. Probably few persons found fault with any particular thing he said. The trouble is that he chose eminently well to do with things in a small way, and it was probably just because he was a rather small and unimportant man.

Someone said, "May the Lord save us from the middlin' doctor, and the middlin' teacher, but especially from the middlin' preacher." We are not so much afraid of those who may be of moderate eloquence, but rather are alarmed about those who have small conceptions of the importance of the work and small enterprise in discharging their duties. Not every man can be conspicuously great, but everyone can do his best, and it is such a great thing to preach the great gospel, that anyone can really do his best, and in a really great way, if he puts himself into it with all his heart and mind and soul and strength, in the love and truth of God.

_Worthiness_ was once defined as "treating great things as though they were small, and small things as though they were great." Thus, little things in social life are by some considered more important than religion, Christ, salvation, the Church and eternity. It would be well to think this definition over and see how it is in our own lives.—E. P. W., in _The Presbyterian_.

HOW TO PREPARE AN EXPOSITORY SERMON

This is the title of an excellent book written by Harold E. Knott, Professor of Homiletics, Euteene Bible University, Eugene, Oregon. There is no more fruitful method of preaching than exposition. All writers on preaching agree that it is the most effective form, yet very few of the modern preachers are using this method. Perhaps it is because they have not had instruction in preparing such messages, and there are very few books published from which a preacher may get definite help in preparing this type of message. This book is published with the idea of supplying this long-felt need and it very clearly sets forth the principles involved in expository preaching, how to study for and prepare such messages, and numbers of examples of expository sermon outlines are given. "Any preacher who will give the plan (expository preaching) a fair trial will find the preparation of sermons an increasingly delightful task, his study of the Word of God will have a more purposeful meaning, and his congregation will grow in grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." It states the author in emphasizing the benefits of expository preaching. No matter how many books a preacher has studied or read on homiletics he be profited by the study of this book. Young preachers in particular will reap untold benefits from its study. Any preacher who is interested in expository preaching will find the principles of such preaching clearly outlined in this book. There is no better way for a pastor to edify his people or to help them get established in spiritual things than by biblical preaching and the greatest of all biblical preaching is the expository method. "Troubles"—The things which try and test the strength and the courage; the difficulties to be overcome, the heights to be scaled, the conflicts to be endured, the victories to be won. For he who challenges the best endeavors that one's mettle, that develop character and moral fiber, let God be praised. Physical tests and muscular training make for bodily strength and vigor; mental tests and intellectual training make for keenness of perception and clearness of thought; and tests and spiritual conflicts make for strength of character and greater power for service.—Selected.
