Pulpit Power Is No Substitute for Home Ministry

By V. H. Lewis

I had spent the morning in my studio reading theology and getting my next Sunday's sermons in a partial state of readiness. Now lunch was over; I was prepared to spend the afternoon calling on my people.

After a call or two, I drew up in front of a small, weather-beaten house on a side street in the town. As I knocked on the door, I noticed the loose boards on the porch floor, the need of paint on the outside of the house. Tired steps coming and the opening of the door occupied my interest. A toilworn, tired face looked out at me. "Oh, it's you, Pastor. I have been hoping you would come by this week. Come in."

I seated myself on the faded divan and inquired as to her health and the welfare of the family. She was the only Christian in the family and the only one who was a member of my church. She was making earnest but unfruitful efforts so far to win the children to God, but the sordid influence of a drinking husband was a saboteur of her work.

Her burdens were heavy. She needed someone to talk to. I gave her careful attention as she told of her burdens. As her tired voice came to a halt, I offered some words of encouragement and suggested prayer. We both knelt; she by the wooden chair, I by the divan.

I raised my voice in prayer. Even as I began my petition on her behalf, I could sense the presence of the Lord in the room. He was there lifting her load, giving her strength, encouraging her to be faithful. She wept in release of her heartache and rejoiced in her peace. Her face was radiant as I left. The Lord who loves and cares was her Lord and He ministered to her need.

As I returned to my car, I mused in my heart: I spent the morning in the study with books and homiletics. It had no special touch of divine presence in it. Here I knelt on that bare floor and had just started to pray when the room was filled with divine presence. He spoke to me, "Son, I dwell with the needy, the poor in spirit, the lonely, the burdened. You will find Me there."

Our study is good and we need it, but let us never forget that we walk close to Him when we walk among the heavy-laden, those who need our ministry.

Pastor and evangelist, let us walk where He walks today!

Infidels with Christian Labels

Not too much inquiry is needed to know whether or not this or that big name is hiding a lot of infidelity behind a little piety. Profound thought alone does not make a Christian; there must with it be profound faith. Neither does religiosity make a Christian. Buddhists are pious, but they are not thereby Christian.

And there are a few telltale signs. Authentic Christianity makes no attempt to accommodate itself to the thought patterns of "the modern mind." Every generation has had its "modern mind," which is nothing but the ancient mind of materialistic unbelief. The mind of the twentieth-century man with his naive trust in science no more stumbles at the miraculous and otherworldly elements in Christianity than did the "modern mind" of Paul's day, to whom the preaching of the Cross was foolishness. But to make Christianity palatable to the "modern mind" is to destroy it. To remove the offense is to remove its essence.

These men, therefore who question the personality of God, the final authority of the Bible, the biblical doctrine of creation, the reality and necessity of special revelation, the miraculous element in Hebrew-Christian history (calling it "myth" or "tradition"), the virgin birth and the uniqueness of Christ as the God-man, the necessity and adequacy of the blood atonement, the literalness of the Resurrection, the power and significance of Pentecost, and the certainty of Christ's second coming, are not true believers in any historically legitimate sense of that term. They are unbelievers. It is not necessary to know their works thoroughly to have sound basis for rejecting them, and to turn one's attention elsewhere. If a single foolproof test is needed as a quick guideline, let it be the issue of naturalism vs. supernaturalism. He who so rethinkes and revamps Christianity that in the process he deletes from it the supernatural is essentially an infidel. Why spend much time sorting through the mountain of fool's gold trying to find a few genuine grains ("insights" is the word)?

There are eager young men who try hard (fervishly, in fact) to ride the crest of the latest wave, but in the meanwhile their knowledge of the Bible is both superficial and secondhand. They know Bullmann and Ferré but they don't know Wiley, Pope, or John Wesley. Instead of riding waves, let them find the main channel.

The best cure for the hypnotic spell of the heterodox is a thorough, bedrock, unmistakable baptism with the Holy Spirit.

How Not to Write for the "Nazarene Preacher"

Paul said, "He that desireth the office of a bishop desireth a good thing; and to that we can add, he that desireth the ministry of writing also desireth a good thing—a very good thing, in fact. But it takes more than desire to become a useful writer, just as it takes more than desire to become a successful pastor.

A course in writing cannot be outlined in one editorial. But most of the voluntary contributors to the Nazarene Preacher make at least one of three mistakes; some, sure enough, make all three.

First, they sermonize. They begin with a text, and proceed to enlarge on an outline, which is very preachable but not particularly printable. A sermon is not an article, and an article is not a sermon.

Secondly, they are too wordy and diffuse. They try to cover too much ground, and kill too many birds with one volley of bird shot. They have been ruminating for a long time about the task, the problems, and the faults of preachers, and now that they have finally decided to express themselves they come out with a miniature course in pastoral theology. Everything is touched, from how to preach, to how to call, to how to pray. We can print a few like this, but not many, and we get too many. Why not focus on a single problem, or a facet which is of interest currently to a large segment of ministerial brethren, and write a factual, interesting, supported, illustrated, and helpful article on that?

Thirdly, they are too critical. Sermons and articles which dissect the church and publicize its "diseases are: sick of a few, like this, but not many, and we get too many. Why not focus on a single problem, or a facet which is of interest currently to a large segment of ministerial brethren, and write a factual, interesting, supported, illustrated, and helpful article on that?

A certain amount of self-criticism is essential to health and progress, but too much is debilitating. It is proper that we carry, and sometimes share, a concern for our Zion. But sometimes our concern, when given lopsided publicity, exaggerates the faults without remedying them. Taking things apart without putting them together is fun for amateurs when playing with old cars and clocks. But when the church is at stake, we had better be sure of our skill in assembling before we presume to do much disassembling.

Therefore, don't waste too many words diagnosing our ailments; write out some prescriptions. Show us how to preach better, how to be better men, how to be more successful pastors and evangelists. Show us improved ways of operating a church or promoting revival. We need some underscoring of glaring defects, enough to shock us out of complacency and stir us up. But after we have groveled a bit, get us on our feet; put faith and hope in our hearts, and send us out with a new sense of the glory and romance of the ministry. Don't just label our problems; help us solve them. Don't just name and classify our burdens; help us to get under them and carry them. Then your name will be choice perfume in our hearts and we will rise up early to call you blessed.

Our Thanksgiving for Jesus Christ

By Joseph T. Larson

Every member of the body of Christ has abundant reasons for being thankful for Jesus Christ. Too often we are thankful for mere things, and that has its place; but surely our thanksgiving should be for Jesus Christ—His personality, and all His benefits toward His people.

Paul said, "But thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (I Cor. 15:57). "Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of His knowledge by us in every place" (II Cor. 2:14).

In a Christian paper, many years ago, appeared a picture of an aged man sitting at a table with only a little bread and some tea. But he was saying, "This and Christ too!"

It matters little how poor or how rich a person may be, if he belongs to Christ, there is real occasion for thankfulness to God.

We may be thankful for Christ's earthly ministry in healing the sick, forgiving man's sins, and comforting the sorrowing. We may be thankful for His power in casting out evil spirits, and for the miracles which He performed.

We may be thankful for the compassion and love that He had and still has for all mankind. His love embraces all, reaching to the lowest depths of fallen man, raising sinners in their salvation to the highest heights of glory.

We should be thankful for His perfect atonement for the sins of all mankind, being beneficial to those who accept Him as a personal Saviour. No one else ever died more victoriously and vicariously. He was our Substitute, dying in our behalf.

We should be thankful to Christ for His grace, mercy, and kindness, so freely given because of His atoning death upon the Cross. "Being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God" (II Cor. 9:11).

We should be thankful for ways so freely given by many Christians to comfort patients, saving them from much pain and even death. "Giving thanks always for all things unto God" (Eph. 5:20).

The Holy Spirit and the Gift of Tongues

By E. Stanley Jones

One of the greatest needs, if not the greatest need, is a rediscovery of the Holy Spirit. Without the Holy Spirit the Christian faith is a counsel of perfection. With Him anything is possible. A Holy Spiritless Christianity is a vast whipping-up of the will, a tendentious, an exhausting struggle to be good and to do one's duty. With the Holy Spirit there is an effortless adequacy, a sure touch on everything. With Him everything in Christianity becomes possible and not only possible but actual. The Holy Spirit is the applied edge of redemption.

The modern hunger on the part of earnest Christians to break through the formalism, the barren intellectualism, the half-wiseness of modern Christianity of the Acts is a hopeful sign. We rejoice in this hunger and its result in changed lives.

But it is disconcerting that this rediscovery of the Holy Spirit is in many places being linked up with the gift of tongues. You have the Holy Spirit if you have the gift of tongues and you haven't Him if you haven't that gift. It is not always stated that boldly, but it is implied.

To bind up the possession of the Holy Spirit with the possession of the gift of tongues is, to my mind, perhaps the greatest spiritual disaster that has struck this confused and groping age. For nothing would queer the gift of the Holy Spirit more quickly to the thoughtful mind of this age than to reduce the Holy Spirit to unintelligibility. For the gift of tongues is unintelligible utterance—unintelligible to the speaker and to the hearers, except as it be interpreted by the gift of interpretation in someone else. This differentiates it from the tongues used at Pentecost.

There "every man heard in his own language the wonderful works of God." This type of tongues was immediately available to every man who heard—it was in his own language and it needed no interpreter. And it was not stray sentences which they heard in their own languages—it was a whole discourse and was so plain and available that at the end people accepted it and were converted. This type of tongues has apparently not reappeared in its modern expression. People have come to India hoping to be able to evangelize the people of India without learning the language and without using an ordinary interpreter. The wreckage of those hopes is strewn across India. It simply hasn't happened. If you speak the Gospel to India, you learn the language or use an interpreter. The Pentecost type of tongues is not available.

Then what was the point in the Pentecost type of tongues? Was it not this: People were gathered from all that ancient world on this festival from Europe, Asia, Africa. A new movement of redemption was being launched. Would it be a Jewish phenomenon, so that if you accepted it you would become a Jew, with the Jewish language and Jewish culture? No, that Jewish mold was broken. "Every man heard in his own language the wonderful works of God," (Acts 2:6-8). God was going to use all languages and all cultures to express His New Life. Here the Gospel was emancipated from Jewish national narrowness and universalized. The mold was broken. This was a special miracle for a special occasion and for a special purpose—universalization. This happened in Jerusalem, the center of Jewish exclusiveness; it also happened at the house of Cornelius, a Roman Gentile in Caesarea; and it happened in Ephesus, the center of Greek and pagan culture in Asia Minor. So at the heart of Jewish culture in Jerusalem, at the heart of Rome in Caesarea, and at the heart of Greek and pagan culture in Ephesus the gift of tongues was connected with the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 10:46; 19:6). This was a strategically imparted gift to break the narrow local conceptions and universalize the Gospel. Just as "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews" was written in Roman, Greek, and Hebrew on the Cross, to let all nations and tongues know He is King, so in these three centers of culture the Gospel spoke directly in their language. In Caesarea it says they spoke "in tongues extolling God," it was not an unknown tongue. The people knew they were extolling God. And at Ephesus they spoke "in tongues and prophesies"—and prophecy was not foretelling events, but forthtelling the Good News, the people uninformed. This set the Pentecost type of tongues as something apart and different—a special miracle for a special purpose. The only other place "tongues" is mentioned in the New Testament is at Corinth. Here appeared another type of tongues—an unknown tongue, unknown to the speaker and unknown to the listeners, except someone arose who could interpret.

Incidentally the discussion of tongues contained in the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth chapters of I Corinthians is the only mention of tongues in the whole of the Epistles of Paul, John, Peter, and all the rest of the Epistles. And it was raised in these three chapters only because it was causing division and confusion. In all the theological writings of the apostles it is mentioned only once. If it has the importance now, being given to it in certain quarters, why was it not mentioned more than this once? They mention "love, joy, and peace" again and again—and again—the gift of tongues once.

If the answer is given that Jesus mentioned it in the passage in Mark 16:17: "And these signs will accompany those who believe: in my name they will cast out demons; they will speak in new tongues; they will pick up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it will not hurt them; they will lay hands on the sick, and they will recover," then the answer is as follows:

All the recent versions say that the Gospel of Mark was broken off and lost from verse 8 on and that a number of second-century attempts were made to fill out this lost portion. Among these attempts the above verse appears. It is the kind of verse man, unaided by inspiration, would insert. For every single one of these "signs" is a semi-magical quality—not one of them a moral quality: cast out devils, speak in new tongues, pick up serpents, drink any deadly thing, and lay hands on the sick. If these had been the "signs" of believing Christians, then Christianity would... have died as a wonder cult. Only two of these signs were found in Jesus: He cast out devils and laid hands on the sick. The other three: speaking in tongues, picking up serpents, and drinking deadly poisons, were not found in Him. What kind of list of "signs" is this when only two would apply to Jesus and three would not?

Alongside of that list of "signs" of a Christian put this verse: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control" (Gal 5:22, RSV). Every one of them is a moral quality. Which of the two lists shows signs of authentic divine inspiration? The Christian conscience will unhesitatingly say that the list beginning with "love" and ending in "self-control" is the divinely inspired list. And every single one of them would apply to Jesus. He embodied them all.

This raises this question: Did Jesus have the Holy Spirit? The answer is Yes! Did He speak in tongues? The answer is No. Would it add anything to Him to have Him speak in tongues? I want Him just as He is! Then if Jesus had the Holy Spirit and did not speak in tongues; I want to be like Him, so I can have the Holy Spirit and not speak in tongues. Suppose you embodied these nine fruits of the Spirit, what kind of character would you be? The best type. Suppose you embodied the five signs of Mark 16:17, what kind of character would you be? A religious showman type—picking up serpents to show they wouldn’t bite you and drinking deadly poison to prove it wouldn’t hurt you. And why take one sign—speaking in new tongues—and leave out picking up serpents and drinking deadly things? Why not all five of the signs? It would kill it!

Millions have been filled with the Spirit and never speak in tongues. And moreover, this must be said: only where it is taught that tongues accompanies the coming of the Holy Spirit does this phenomenon occur. I have been in revivals where a whole college was converted, every single student; and people coming in from the surrounding countryside would be stricken by the power of the Holy Spirit before they entered the auditorium, stricken as they entered the campus, and converted. And yet no one spoke in tongues. Why? It wasn’t taught. It was taught that the sign that accompanied the coming of the Holy Spirit were “love, joy, peace,” etc., resulting in changed character.

In these modern manifestations of speaking in tongues it is not only taught—it is often induced. A group will gather around the seeker and lay their hands on his head and the seeker is sometimes urged to use some foreign words he may know to start the flow. Or he is instructed to hold his jaw loose and to let his tongue stick out. Or he is asked to repeat the name of Jesus over and over and then urged to go faster and faster until he goes so fast that he begins to stammer. “Now,” he is told, “you are getting it. For the Scripture says: ‘I will speak to them with men of stammering lips.’”

No wonder then the use of tongues has always been divisive. It will divide any group into which it is introduced. In the great Uganda Africa revival, Dr. Church, a medical missionary, was the moving spirit, greatly used of God. Thousands were converted, whole villages and sections transformed. Dr. Church went off to another group which spoke in tongues; came back and began to speak in tongues in the Uganda revival. The African leaders took him aside and said, “This has made you proud. You will divide the people. Over this,” he saw they were right. He gave up the speaking in tongues and gave himself to the main business of creating changed people, and the revival went on with power and unity.

For our pattern of the Spirit-filled person is Jesus. We would be filled with the Spirit and be made like Him. He is the center of our unity and our pattern of the Spirit-filled life.

How the pastor can help in the treatment of the mentally ill

The Minister's Role in Psychiatry

By Jerry McCant*

The number of people suffering with emotional problems is increasing. This means that the minister must be prepared to minister to the emotionally ill as well as the physically ill. The purpose of this paper is to determine the basic knowledge needed for the minister to visit the psychiatric division of a hospital.

The information was acquired through three years of experience in the psychiatric division at Vanderbilt Hospital, Nashville, Tennessee, and through questionnaires sent to the psychiatrists and the psychiatric nurses. After the paper was written, it was read and approved by members of the professional staff of the University hospital.

Does the minister have a role in psychiatry? The answer was a strong, unanimous “Yes!” He has a role to play that no one else can play. Since 48 percent of the people with severe emotional problems first consult with a minister, the role of the minister is a must. Patients often have guilt feelings and other spiritual needs that only a qualified minister can help them with. The psychiatrist cannot give spiritual guidance.

However, psychiatrists and nurses are quick to point out that only "trained" ministers can play their part. No minister should attempt to work with a patient until he has at least had a course in pastoral counseling. It is better if he can work under a qualified hospital chaplain or work on the psychiatric ward himself.

What role should the minister play? His work should always be as a member of the team. The minister should never feel his work is independent of the hospital staff. Get acquainted with the nursing staff and the attending physician, if possible. They will be pleased by your interest and will guide you in working with the particular patient so that your ministry will be beneficial.

The minister is a representative of God. Play that part! Don't ever try to "play psychiatrist!"

How the minister plays his part. Be a good listener. You do not need to feel obligated to give a lot of advice on "how to get well." Stress the love and forgiveness of God; do not emphasize hell and the negative side of religion. There is a place for this, but the place is not in a psychiatric ward. Give the patient the feeling of acceptance; encourage and reassure. Use religious materials only after you have consulted the charge nurse and asked what the doctor's orders are in this regard.

It may be hard for the minister to realize, but there are times when it is not appropriate to use the Bible or other devotional materials with a mentally ill. An example might clarify this point. A patient once said to me, "I'm manure!" She added, "I found it in the Bible." Other patients sometimes feel they are God, or the mother of Jesus. The minister must also realize there are those who are superficially pleasant with him, but underneath they are very antagonistic and hostile. To such a person, these materials would not prove helpful at the time.

What kind of information should the minister report to the staff? There are things patients will reveal to the minister that he would never reveal to other members of the team. The expression of any fears (real or imagined) should be reported as the minister leaves the ward. A paranoid patient might confide to his minister, "Everyone is against me." The minister may learn of family conflict when the patient suddenly blurt out, "I hate my wife!!" It may only be in the presence of the minister that a patient could express delusions as, "I'm God," or, "I'm Napoleon." If he has strong feelings for or against religion, it should be honestly reported. A mentally ill person (though a devout Christian) may feel that God is to blame that he is ill. He may openly accuse God of being "mean." Report the patient's reaction to your visit. Any direct or indirect statements that seem to be suicidal should be reported to the staff. A minister of the Lord's who believe lives have threatened suicide before killing themselves. This material could prove of great value in the patient's therapy.

When should the minister visit? Visit only after you have consulted the charge nurse and understood the doctor's orders. Wait until the patient is not so confused. Plan your visits so they do not interfere with meals, medications, or treatments.

How long should the minister's visit last? This varies with the individual patient. Make it a practice to be brief. Do not tire the patient by staying too long. Visit frequently but for only a few minutes.

How shall the minister greet the patient? Greet him as you would if he visited your church on Sunday morning. Be friendly and casual. Don't be "standoffish" or cold in your approach. This may communicate to the patient your feelings about his illness. Know his name before you go into his room, and call his name when you greet him. Do not be too jovial or too sedate. The patient may not feel jovial, and the fact that you can and are may make him angry and antagonistic toward you. Over-seriousness may make him feel depressed. Be natural; don't allow yourself to seem superficial. Patients are sensitive and can detect your feelings. Avoid saying, "How are you?" This may cause him to reflect on how he feels. He needs to be diverted from himself. Interest in other things is helpful in the patient's getting well.

Should the minister compliment the patient's improvement in appearance? Compliments are not treatment and can be highly dangerous. If compliments are given, be realistic. If a female patient hasn't combed her hair for weeks, and has on a dress she has worn since she came in, it would do little good to tell her how nice she looks! Do not compliment a depressed patient. If a person says, "I look perfectly terrible," he probably means it and may think you are being sarcastic when you say he looks nice. Never openly contradict his statement. Telling a patient how much better he looks may have the effect of causing him to reflect on how terrible he must have looked while he was in a state of confusion. To be safe, avoid compliments.

How can he best help the patient and his family? The best help he can give is to give them understanding and reassurance. Always be careful to be realistic in your reassurance. No one can predict how long hospitalization will last and there is no guarantee of a cure. When the patient or family asks, "How long will it take?" be honest and say, "No one can really answer that question." If the family asks, "Will he get well?" you may reassure them with, "Others have gotten well; I'm sure he is in capable hands and will receive good care." There is still a stigma attached to mental illness. Show the patient understanding and acceptance. Avoid entirely the term "crazy."

How will the minister refer a disturbed counselee to a psychiatrist? This depends on the circumstances. If the patient is acutely disturbed, emergency measures must be used. That is, if he leaves your office threatening to kill his neighbor, wife, or employer, you should alert some capable person who can give professional assistance. For the less disturbed counselee, try to help him to see the necessity of seeking professional help. You might give him a list of psychiatrists and mental health clinics in your area. Be familiar with psychiatric facilities and pass this information to the patient and his family. If he wants you to, you could go with him for his first visit. If you cannot talk with the disturbed person, try to help the family see the need of getting help for him.

At any rate, do not try to help a person with a problem that is beyond your training. It is no credit to a minister to have a counselee leave his office to go out and commit suicide! Prepare yourself by getting all the training in this area that you can. Have plenty of select books on counseling and avail yourself of all opportunities to learn more about the treatment of mental illness: Do what you can; then turn the reins over to more qualified hands. Be a good team member. Ministers have a role to play, but they can play their part only when they are prepared. Prepare yourself and conduct yourself so the staff and patient will appreciate your work. The informed minister can help instead of hindering the work with the mentally ill.

Guideposts to a More Effective Ministry

By Raymond C. Kratzer*

No. 10. Anointed Hearts

The ultimate success of the minister depends upon the touch of God upon his heart and life. Without it his work lacks color and depth, and the effect will be only temporary at the best. It's "not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts" (Zech. 4:6). Exegetical correctness, oratorical finesse, and logical persuasion will fall short of convincing people of their spiritual needs unless the heart of the preacher is anointed by the Holy Spirit. With this touch from above, every device of persuasion will be enhanced and made effective. In fact, a mediate presentation of the gospel from an anointed heart will have more far-reaching effects than one can imagine and will battle the devotee who worships only at the altar of perfection.

I can recall preaching a sermon which I had deemed rather second-rate in content, but suddenly while it was being delivered my heart began to glow with a divine warmth and the people were blessed, sinners were touched, and the atmosphere was charged with the presence of God. I have searched the notes of that message for the clue to its success, but have been unsuccessful in finding the formula within the framework of its outline or content. Rather it was that unmerited, unexplainable, inward Presence that put the glow in it.

As ministers of the Word of God, we must ever seek to have the "anointing" upon all of our messages. And only as we seek on purpose in the place of prayer for God's rewarding presence will we be honored by this blessed experience. It will take time and energy to translate as Jacob did and refuse to let God go until He blesses you. But it is imperative if we move a world toward God. The great pipe organ is but a cold replica of man's ingenuity until the force of air and electricity enlivens its mechanism. Likewise, our preaching will be dead and cold unless it is touched by the moving of the Spirit of God. God has designed our emotions to be outlets and avenues through which He may work to the best advantage in guiding us. And unless the minister is moved through his emotions, he will fail to move his people toward God and toward their better selves.

If the emotion of "love" is touched of God, you will love God with all of your heart, soul, mind, and strength—and your neighbor as yourself. His love will overwhelm you until it will affect your people. Likewise, this love of God, shed abroad in your heart by the Holy Ghost, will reach out to your people and to save the lost from hell. When Jesus was called to the grave of Lazarus, the account says that "Jesus wept." When you look into the original of this short statement, you will discover that His whole body shook with sobs and lamentation. Was this display of emotion only because Lazarus had died? Surely not; for Jesus knew that in just a few moments he would come forth from the grave to the joy of his sisters and friends. But Jesus was overwhelmed at the product of sin and the long, useless trail of woe, suffering, and death that it had sired in the Garden of Eden.

John Wesley discovered that a "tremendous assault upon the emotions" was a significant preparation to aiding people in finding Christ. W. A. Sargent, physician in psychological medicine at a well-known London teaching hospital, adds his own comment to Wesley's discovery: "All evidence goes to show that there can be no new Protestant revival while the policy continues of appealing mainly to adult intelligence and reason, and until Church leaders consent to take more advantage of the normal person's emotional mechanism, for disrupting old behavior patterns and implanting new" (p. 64, Apostle Extraordinary, by Reginald E. O. White).

Let us preach with such conviction that people will feel the shame of their sins and the awfulness of eternal retribution. Let us pray that God's Holy Spirit will move their emotional nature to the breaking point—the point of breaking with their sins and the old life. Dr. Vanderpoel gave to a group of preachers this tried and proven method of preaching that achieves results. He said, "First, fill their minds; second, stir their emotions; and third, drive them to a decision."

The complacency of our day in terms of eternal verities is frightening. The soft life of so many people with material satisfactions everywhere has dulled their sensitivity toward the importance of salvation. But people are just as lost without knowing it as if they were completely aware of their condition. If they are not moved by the desperate plight they are in, we should become more stirred than ever in order to awaken them. We should pray until our souls are bathed in the presence of God, until our hearts are moved with the same compassion that produced Calvary. We need more tears in our religion, more tears in our preaching, born of the knowledge and realization that people are lost. It was said of Jesus that "he was moved with compassion." Ministers with "anointed hearts" will feel a kinship with the Master.

I am confident, likewise, that the minister with an anointed heart will be led of the Spirit in hi attitudes, actions, and his activities. The 'still small voice' of the Lord is still speaking. But too often it is drowned out by the din of our own thoughts and ideas. David said, "Be still, and know that I am God." And it takes time to catch the signals from the Lord to know which way to go at times. Satan has a way of pushing us, but God leads us. A good rule of thumb in this regard is that when you feel too pushed toward something you had better hold up and wait. If it is good, it is worth waiting for; and it will not be injured because of the waiting process if God is in it. Many problems will resolve themselves through the mysterious aid of the Spirit if an anointed-hearted preacher will only let go and let God have His way.

David said in Ps. 39:3, "My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned; then spake I with my tongue." As ministers of the Bread of Life, we need anointed hearts and lips. Our day is too far spent and what we do we must do quickly. Souls are lost and many could be saved, if they could receive the impact of divine love upon their hearts. An anointed ministry is the key to this impact.
A Plea for Sanctified Board Members

By B. T. Taylor*

When our Manual states, “We direct our local churches in selecting their church officers to elect only such as are clearly in the experience of entire sanctification” (Chapter IV, Paragraph 39), it does so with good scriptural authority, for in speaking to the Early Church the apostles also directed, “Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business” (Acts 6:3). And in case anyone wants to know, there are valid reasons for such admonitions.

1. Anything, especially, a church, will be known by its most prominent characteristic. When a holiness church is being directed by those who do not profess the experience of holiness, it will not be long before that church ceases to be a holiness church in everything but name.

2. Those elected to a church board are to be examples of the church and to the church. The experience of entire sanctification is best evidenced by a godly walk, consistent conduct, loyalty to the program of the church, concern with the spiritual welfare of others, faithfulness in attendance upon the services, and cooperation for the building of the church and the Kingdom. There is something absurd and illogical about having those who are not in full agreement with the doctrines and standards, nor in harmony with the objectives and program, and not enjoying the experience upon which our church was built, trying to direct the affairs of that church. Yet such men not only will accept, but sometimes seek, the office.

More on the Theology of Prayer

Question. What does it mean to “pray through”?

Answer. Briefly we can say that a situation has been “prayed through” when the burden has been lifted, and we are given by the Holy Spirit an unmistakable assurance that God has undertaken, or will undertake, decisively, supernaturally, and adequately. We are then able to go about our business with perfect peace of mind.

Praying through is much more than simply praying. It is possible to do a lot of random praying without arriving anywhere or reaching any specific objectives. The praying of some preachers is like the biting of some dogs: they do a lot of nibbling but never really take hold.

But is this so-called “praying through” merely a psychological phenomenon, an emotional release which has been achieved by a period of intense concentration and tension? Is the easing of the burden and the assurance which we obtain all that has been accomplished? Or is the “assurance” the divine signal that something has been accomplished out there which would not have been brought to pass otherwise? Obviously this is the crux of the theology of prayer.

Sometimes, of course, the subjective element is the most important, as in those cases when the “praying through” consists of arriving at a solution, or a clear sense of guidance, upon which we can proceed to act. But at other times the problem cannot be touched by anything we can do. It is too far away, or concerns too many other people, or matters beyond our sphere. Then it is the supernatural or nothing. It is then not what we are led to do, but what God does, that is decisive. In such cases the subjective elements of release and assurance experienced by the pray-er are the least important; what really happens is a release of divine power out there. A spiritual battle has been fought and won, which concerns not ourselves primarily, but the Kingdom—situations, obstacles, needs, people.

This concept of “praying through” bristles with theological difficulties. Perhaps this is because “now we see through a glass darkly” (1 Cor. 13:12). Fortunately, many of the saints who have brought mighty things to pass through prayer didn’t even see the difficulties, or if they did, they refused to be sidetracked; they just went right on praying things through. And really there is no better cure for the plague of secret skepticism than to pigeonhole the doubts long enough to set one’s self to praying a specific matter through. Then when the assurance comes and we thereafter see God work, we can go back to the pigeonhole, and we’ll find that, though the theological difficulties are still present, the doubts have vanished.

Actually one's basic faith in the achieving power of prayer is linked with one's basic faith in the Bible. Skepticism in one probably reflects a hidden skepticism in the other. For there can be no doubt that the Bible teaches a power in prayer that is objective and decisive, in the sense that it affects invisible, spiritual forces, both divine and demonic. The Bible makes no attempt to give a rationale of this. any more than it attempts to prove the existence of God. It just makes such affirmations as, "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (James 5:16b), and then overflows from Genesis to Revelation with concrete examples.

Some of the difficulties begin to dissolve, or at least seem less formidable when we take both literally and seriously such passages as Ephesians 6:12: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the despairs of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

The Holy War was not simply a figment of Bunyan's imagination but is going on right now in terrible reality. And evidently God in His sovereignty has ordained that His saints shall play their most decisive part in this war on their knees. Prayer is one of the weapons which are "not carnal," but spiritual. Prayer is the Church's "secret weapon." The trouble is it is too secret. Satan has no fear of unused weapons.

All this forces upon us the conclusion that many battles for souls and Kingdom interests which have been lost must have been won if someone had taken the trouble to pray them through. No true revival ever occurs except as some person or persons pray it through first. To pray some things through requires a few minutes; others, hours; others, days and weeks; occasionally there is a situation that will yield only to years of intercessory prayer. Every time a prayer victory has been won the real work of the Kingdom has been done. Everything else either moves to this crucial control room or flows out from it.

Could it be that this is why some of us aren't accomplishing more? Do we know how to be experts in culture, puppetry, techniques, manipulation and maneuvering, finances, committee work, wheel oiling and turning, but do not know how to pray through? Then we are beating the air. We may be cutting a wide swath and apparently making a great showing, but eternally we are beating the air nevertheless.

"God showed me as a young preacher what I could become. And I went to work."

Pastors, have you reorganized your Cradle Roll under the new plan authorized by the General Assembly? It's as easy as A B C.

The Cradle Roll is now a separate department of the Sunday school instead of a division of the Nursery Department. It is a home ministry to parents and children under four, who DO NOT attend Sunday school.

Members of the Cradle Roll are those children from birth to four who do not attend Sunday school and who have been enrolled by a Cradle Roll supervisor or worker.

When these young children are brought to Sunday school with a reasonable degree of regularity, they are transferred to the Nursery Department rolls.

GOAL: Cradle Roll membership equal to 10 percent of total Sunday school enrollment

For further information write Cradle Roll Division, Department of Church Schools, NAU, The Pasco, Kansas City, Missouri 64111. Ask for the leaflet, Reaching Homes Through the Cradle Roll.

Department of HOME MISSIONS

MISSIONS, 1964-68

Thanksgiving is the time for the first big missionary offering of the new quadrennium. The dedicated lives of missionaries, our giving, and our prayers are the human ingredients to carry forward our missionary program for these four years. We know that in some way these are taken and blessed of God to bring salvation to hundreds in many lands.

The overseas home mission fields share in our Thanksgiving Offering receipts. The Church of the Nazarene is advancing in eleven countries under the Department of Home Missions. One of these is Germany. We have a church in West Berlin, not far from the Wall—the dreadful, ugly barrier that speaks only of fear, oppression, and hatred. Let us not fail our Nazarenes in these strategic outposts by doing less than our best at Thanksgiving.

Rev. and Mrs. H. E. Hegstrom are now in Sweden, launching the church in a new country where there is need of holiness evangelism. The Thanksgiving Offering is the means of keeping them there and giving them the support they need as they seek for property and follow the Lord's leadership in the opening of this new work. Remember them in prayer.

Give generously at Thanksgiving, and encourage your congregation to follow your example.

SPECIAL NOTE—Pictures of the Wall are now included in the newly revised filmstrip of West Germany and Denmark. On the accompanying narrative on magnetic tape, you hear two of our German pastors and the district superintendent, Rev. Jerald D. Johnson. Rent from the Department of Home Missions, $2.50.

November “Moving Nazarenes” Emphasis

Pastor, would you like a personalized pocket Bible as a gift? The Department of Evangelism will send one to each of three pastors who sends us the best “Moving Nazarenes” story (of not more than 300 words) received in our office by December 1, 1964.

The awards will be made on the basis of the most gripping, dynamic, and dramatic incident. Well-presented facts must be accurate. This information will help the Department know that this service is filling a need and rendering a valuable service. Someone outside the Department will review all stories received and choose the three best. The Department will keep all stories submitted.

DURING NOVEMBER PLEASE DO THIS
1. Survey your church membership rolls.
2. Send names of all your Nazarenes who have moved out of town to our Department.
3. We will forward that name to the nearest Nazarene pastor.
4. He will send us a report of the results of his contact with that person or family.
5. We will return that report back to you immediately.

Sunday School—the Growing Edge

The story of the Sunday schools of the Church of the Nazarene is thrilling. There are over 6,000 Sunday schools, 4,659 of these are in the United States, Canada, and the British Isles.

Sunday schools where dedicated laymen teach the Word, seek the lost, and rejoice when the Holy Spirit brings convictions and souls are born into the kingdom of God! These schools are staffed by men and women who see the value of the Word of God—laymen who have learned the joy that comes from putting first things first in order to have time to call, to pray, to prepare, and to share in the teaching ministry.

Here is a thumbnail sketch of the Sunday schools of the Church of the Nazarene:

- Total enrollment: 822,955
- Average weekly attendance: 503,792
- Church membership: 404,847
- Sunday school members who are not church members: at least 418,108

Every Sunday school is in session each Sunday. On an average Sunday morning 503,792 persons receive instruction in the Word of God. What a force for God and good!

At least 75 percent of the church members received by profession of faith were first contacted through the Sunday school. The regular, Spirit-anointed teaching of the Word is a vital link in evangelizing the lost and building the church.

With this force already marching under the banner of the Sunday schools of the Church of the Nazarene you can see why the slogan “March to a Million” in Sunday school enrollment was so enthusiastically adopted at the recent General Assembly. This challenge represents an increase of 180,000 in enrollment. This will precipitate a not inconsiderable increase in church membership, based on previous records of the relationship of enrollment to church membership.

To make this a reality each local church will have to pray, plan, and work. It also means we will have to recruit and train an additional 18,000 Sunday school teachers. “In the Power of the Spirit” we can.

A denomination-wide study in Unit 165a, “Outreach Through the Sunday School,” using the book Sunday School—the Growing Edge, is planned for February and March of 1965. This study is designed to help the members of every church see the opportunities that are provided through the Sunday school for reaching others. It will help to recruit teachers, increase compassion, and develop a spirit of optimism that will say, “We can and must share the gospel with others.”

NAZARENE INFORMATION SERVICE

Nazarenes in the News

Two of Samuel I. Newhouse's great newspapers, the Journal and the Oregonian, gave Nazarenes and their church their greatest news coverage in the denomination's history at the Sixteenth General Assembly in Portland, Oregon.

For ten consecutive days the residents in that friendly Northwest area read about the Nazarenes.

Editors of the Newhouse newspapers, in a display of journalistic aplomb in handling the largest religious convention in history there, made the Nazarene story page 1 in twenty-one editions or more, with plenty of type and pictures inside, too.

Mr. Newhouse, America's leading newspaper publisher, made news later himself when President Johnson helped to dedicate the first unit of the $15-million Newhouse Communications Center at Syracuse U.

On that occasion Mr. Newhouse said:

"The mass media are enormously influential. They affect human judgment, shape our desires, and influence our choices..."

"They can appeal to the grossest urge or cultivate the highest aspirations. They can subvert an entire nation or they can enhance an open society."

A Part for All

"The mass media have a special responsibility in making sure that the news of the world is reported accurately. But all of us must share in this task."

"The press, microphone, and camera are the crucial weapons in a struggle for men's minds and hearts. They also are the vital implements for creating the good society."

Mr. Newhouse here emphasized our lifelong conviction, often expressed in work of the N.L.S. program, that each pastor is the key in his local situation.

If his work and the church are hidden and misunderstood, the chances are that he is a stranger to his local newspaper. If he and his church are widely and favorably known, it is almost certain the local newspaper has helped to win the respect of the community.

The NAZARENE EVANGELISTIC AMBASSADORS returned with glowing reports of open doors everywhere they went in Latin America. The people were gospel-hungry.

The Radio Department has found this to be true in the broadcasting of LA HORA NAZARENA, as evidenced by the addition of seventy-six new stations since Easter—and more are available.

The above is in sharp contrast to the conditions in other parts of the world where doors have already closed, or are closing rapidly. The forces of evil are combining to eliminate all missionaries and shut the door to the gospel.

This is the reason we are urging all of our missionary societies to give a good freewill offering to help keep LA HORA NAZARENA on the air while the doors are still open. Have you taken your offering yet?

AUDREY J. WILLIAMSON

What Is My Responsibility?

The minister’s wife is not looking for more work! Her busy life is already crammed full, and usually the only reason she ever stops is that the hours in the day—have run out, or that she has reached the point of utter weariness. She has a consuming schedule, and it is always subject to change or revision.

One circumstance which can quickly alter her program is the entrance of death into a home of her husband’s parish. At such a time every minister’s wife stands ready to be of service. One question she must answer is, How far does my responsibility for the physical comfort of this family go?

Some churches, both large and small, have found that a standing committee, responsible for ascertaining the individual needs of each bereaved family, and organized to supply them, is the adequate solution to this problem. Not only is this true for the minister’s wife but for other members of the congregation, willing and eager to lend assistance, but who welcome direction.

This plan has several advantages:

Persons are less hesitant to tell their specific needs for food and lodging for visiting relatives to whom they know the church has appointed to care for just such needs, and who has the resources and the authority to care for them in an organized manner. Though “Call on me if you need me!” or “I’ll do anything I can to help you!” are frequently and sincerely uttered, a person in sorrow is often reluctant to make specific needs known, or too preoccupied to plan effectively.

Requirements for assistance vary greatly with circumstances and with families. Sometimes large numbers of visitors arrive for the funeral and their physical needs must be met. Perhaps an entire meal must be planned, prepared, and served in some place other than the bereaved home. A committee can function in this case much more adequately than individuals whose efforts are well-meaning but unrelated.

Four large macaroni salads arrived at our home on the day my mother was buried. There were three of us to be fed. We appreciated the neighborly gestures and expressed heartfelt thanks for them. But the food was wasted because it was in oversupply and the menu not well balanced.

A committee functioning as the kindly hand of the church prevents discrimination. The family of the prominent and longtime member is well cared for. But so is the family of the new or slightly known affiliate of the church. And such service is not cold and regimented because it is organized. Careful choice of the committee members, and most particularly of the chairman, should be made. Warm, sympathetic, willing, flexibl, discriminating, well-poised women should serve; and they should be made to feel by the pastor and by the congregation that their work is done in the name of the Lord, and that He takes note, and that He hands out the rewards.

This planned procedure need not stifle the individual impulse to do the kindly, thoughtful deed on the part of anyone. But the making of a blueberry pie or a molded salad is none the less a loving expression because one was asked to do it. It is merely the directing of love and sympathy. And there is no prohibition of any further gracious act one is prompted to do over and above the minimum service which is church-sponsored.

November, 1964

If such a committee is functioning in your church, give its members an added word of praise and commendation. If you do not have one, but would like to organize one and give the plan a try, go about it in the most gentle and tactful manner possible. It may seem like an innovation in your community and it could even be a source of resentment, jealousy, or opposition. If the idea is not welcomed, drop it. But nearly always, people are ready for any plan that is better, even if it is different. But it must be suggested graciously and win-somely and without reflection on any past procedure.

It will mean that the responsibilities of the pastor's wife are lightened (though this is not necessarily the impelling motive). For, except in rare circumstances, she should not serve as chairman of the committee. But its great value, in addition to those already stated, is that more people are working, more people are tied in to the church program, and more people come to feel that, whatever they do, they do it for Jesus' sake.

Such planning for the inevitable appearance of death in the church family will not cover every contingency. There are situations where the pastor's wife may need to come forward with courage and decision and selflessness.

Recently in a small town death came in a very shocking manner to two elderly persons, a man and his wife. Because they had sometimes attended the Nazarene church and because our pastor had called on them and shown an interest in them, he was summoned by the authorities. When the family began to be notified, it became apparent that there was a large group concerned and that they would be coming to attend the funeral in numbers.

Because the town was small, public accommodations were limited. What did that young and inexperienced pastor's wife do? She followed her heart! With her one child she moved out of her home and turned the parsonage over to immediate members of the stricken family. A parish home opened to take in the pastor's family, and the situation was saved.

It was an extreme case. That pastor's wife undoubtedly went far beyond the call of duty. But she did not lose. The members of the family involved showed their appreciation in a very tangible way. And you may be sure wherever they may scatter, the Church of the Nazarene will have first claim on their interest and their approval. Furthermore, the word spread throughout that town and the church is reaping the benefit of the unselfish act of that pastor's wife. And I am sure that God himself took notice, and he is keeping the books.

So, parsonage lady, many factors will dictate the extent to which you are responsible for the family at the time of bereavement. Your greatest ministry will be as a bearer of consolation, courage, hope, and faith. You may also need to assume some responsibility for the physical well-being of the family and their guests. Your own home demands will determine how much of this is your obligation. But be assured that there will occur no other occasion in the lives of your church family when your efforts will be more surely appreciated. And know, too, that the cup of cold water is the greatest gift of all to one who is dying of thirst. In the final analysis it is "need" that will teach you "how much." God bless you, every one!

Studies in the Sermon on the Mount

By Rev. H. K. Bedwell*

No. 6 Matt. 5:27-32

Marriage and the Christian

The preceding verses stress the sacredness of the individual. We are to treat our fellowmen with reverence and respect, not allowing unbridled anger, or contemptuous scorn, or festering bitterness to gain an entrance into our hearts. The passage we are now considering deals with the sacredness of sex. Our relations with those of the opposite sex are to be characterized by purity, and this being so, the question of true marriage comes into the foreground. The sacredness of the individual is the basis of society; the sacredness of sex, the basis of sound family life, which in turn profoundly affects the national life. Jesus teaches three basic principles here.

1. Purity Is the Secret of Faithfulness in Marriage

The seventh commandment says, "Thou shalt not commit adultery," (Exod. 20:14). Jesus expounds this and takes it a step further, as He did with the sixth commandment. There He said hate is murder in intention; here He says the look of lust is adultery in intention. The one is the seed of which the other is the fruit. In effect He says, "Thou shalt not think adultery." In the sight of God, unfaithfulness in heart is equivalent to the act of adultery. The battle of the body is decided by the outcome of the battle of the mind. Eye-gate is the spot that needs to be guarded constantly and well. It was at eye-gate that SA was seduced with Eve, with Achan and with David.

Care should be taken to distinguish between evil thoughts and thoughts of evil. Evil thoughts arise out of evil desires conceived in a sinful heart. Thoughts of evil are the suggestions of the enemy thrown upon the screen of the mind in an effort to defile. They come to us constantly as we move about in a sinful world. They need not defile us. We can learn to habitually reject them, and to "bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ" (II Cor. 10:5). This requires self-discipline and perpetual watchfulness. Thoughts of evil come from the outside and appeal to the senses and the imagination and the desires. By yielding to them we make them evil thoughts, and they defile the mind and heart; we are brought into defeat, and, in consequence weakened for the next attack. Resisted and refused, they serve to strengthen character, and purity is preserved. It follows then that the great essential is heart purity.

November, 1964
The pure in heart will see God in the beauty of womanhood and manhood, in the normal and natural relations of one with the other. Alos that God’s precious gifts have been so destroyed and defiled by impure and unworthy thinking, and so degraded ideas! The normal, God-ordained relation between a man and woman was intended to bring mutual satisfaction and unalloyed joy. Sin has put its besmirching hand upon this beautiful gift and spoiled it. Clean thinking can come only out of a clean heart. That is why David, after his fall into adultery with Bath-sheba, cried to God for a clean heart (Ps. 51:10). Clean hearts will mean clean thoughts. The man with a pure heart will never be unfaithful to the woman of his choice or to womanhood as a whole. He will treat every woman as he would wish his own wife and sister to be treated. Victory in temptation is assured when the eyes are fixed on God.

The “look” which in the eyes of God is equivalent to adultery is the one of deliberate intention. “He that looketh to lust.” For this there is no excuse, for there is deliverance. If there were only more men and women with clean hearts, there would be fewer heartbreaks and fewer divorces. Purity is the secret of faithfulness.

2. Marriage Is Preserved by Self-sacrifice

Marriage based upon selfishness and self-indulgence is doomed to failure. While it is true that God intended marriage to produce mutual satisfaction and joy, it was not intended merely for the pleasure it gives, whether of the body or of the mind. Jesus teaches us that purity in this sacred relationship can be preserved only by self-sacrifice. The right eye is to be plucked out, the right hand to be cut off, if it endanger faithfulness. Jesus says it is better to be harmed than to be damned. God must be placed first, and all that conflicts with His will must be ruthlessly cut out, however great the cost. A marriage which leaves God out has no hope of success. This spirit of self-sacrifice must characterize not only our relationship to God, but also that to the other person in marriage. Jesus Christ has lifted woman out of the place of being a mere plaything and a thing of coitus. The welfare of the partner in all circumstances should come before selfish pleasure. Many marriage problems would be solved and many homes preserved if only these principles were put into practice. Then again, the personal life spiritual well-being must be placed before fleshly gratification. In this connection it would be well to remember the words of Paul, “I keep under my body and bring it into subjection.” Let that by any means, when I have preached to others, myself should be a castaway.” (1 Cor. 9:27). If we are not prepared to let go the things that destroy our souls and spoil our life partner’s spiritual life and happiness, then we can never know the harmony that comes by self-denial. The habit or act that destroys fellowship with God, and the union of your heart with that of your partner, is costing you far too much. Self-sacrifice is not only the basis of marriage, but it is also the basis of all true living.

3. True Marriage Is Indissoluble

In this matter, we must be careful not to be swayed by the prevailing conditions and ideals of men. We are concerned with only one thing—the standard set up by Jesus Christ. Marriage is a divine institution and it is for life. The teaching of Jesus on this point is consistent and clear. Read carefully Matt. 19:3-10 and Mark 10:1-12 in connection with verses 31-32 in the passage we are considering. It is true that many people find themselves in situations where the ideal of God can never be realized, owing to contracts entered into before the life was given over to God, or take the case of those who have been divorced and remarried before their conversion. For the Christian entering upon marriage with the blessing and guidance of God there is only one way—marriage is for life. Adultery is the only ground of divorce which Jesus admits, and the remarriage of the guilty party constitutes adultery. Whether or not the injured party is free to remarry has been a debated question among Christian leaders. While there is no word of Jesus that forbids it, there is also no word that permits it.

Jesus takes His disciples past the Old Testament permission for divorce and states God’s original intention. There was reason behind that intention. It was intended as a safeguard to the children. It is the children who are the greatest sufferers when a home is broken up by disunity. It was intended as a safeguard to the moral fibre of the human race. Where God’s laws have been broken in this direction, national decay has set in. It was also intended as a discipline which perfects character. Character is not made by a throwing off of responsibilities, or by the evasion of difficulties. The give-and-take necessary in married life, the sharing of responsibility, and the overcoming of difficulties give a richness to life that could be obtained in no other way. There is nothing so wonderful to watch as the blending of two lives over the years into one harmonious whole. This is God’s masterpiece. The rapidly increasing rate of divorce in so-called Christian lands is one of the most discrediting and alarming features of modern life. It will lead to disaster. We must at all costs get back to the standard of Jesus. It is stern and demanding, but it is absolutely safe. Jesus restores to womanhood its true dignity and to marriage its true sanctity. We violate these at our own peril. A clean heart and self-sacrificing love ensure permanence and happiness to those whom God has joined together.

Gleanings from the Greek New Testament

By Ralph Earle

Eph. 5:19-20

Spiritual Music

The nineteenth verse is closely related to the eighteenth. The Spirit-filled person will find a song in his soul. The Holy Spirit will be singing within, and some of this symphony of the soul ought to come out through the lips. Paul uses three terms to describe this heavenly music coming out of the human heart.

The first word is psalmos. It means: “1. a striking, twitching with the fingers (Euripides, others), hence, a striking of musical strings (Aeschylus, others), and hence in later writers, 2. a sacred song sung to musical accompaniment, a psalm (Septuagint).” This definition would be rather unacceptable to those who believe that no musical instruments should be used in public worship.

The word psalmos occurs some seventy times in the Septuagint, a Greek translation of the Old Testament made about two hundred years before Christ. Most of these occurrences are in the titles of the Psalms. It is obvious that the current usage of the term was for sacred songs that were to be sung to the accompaniment of musical instruments. The etymological derivation of the term suggests that these were primarily stringed instruments—which are mentioned a number of times in the Psalms.

This word is used for the Book of Psalms in Luke 20:42 and Acts 1:20; for an individual psalm in Acts 13:33; for the third division of the Hebrew canon...
The second word is hymnos. Abbott-Smith describes its usage thus: "(a) in classics a festal song in praise of gods or heroes; (b) in LXX and NT a song of praise addressed to God." It is found elsewhere in the New Testament only in the parallel passage, Col. 3:16. The third word is ode, which means "a song, ode, whether sad or joyful; in LXX and NT always in praise to God or Christ." It is found three times in Revelation (5:9; 14:3; 15:3) as well as in Col. 3:16. Since it is a general word for "song," it is accompanied by the adjective "spiritual" (pneumatikos).

These three terms are also found together in the parallel passage in Col. 3:16. So they call for a comparison. Some commentators find no difference between them, insisting that Paul was not trying to classify the various forms of Christian poetry. While admitting the truth of the latter claim, Trench asserts: "But neither, on the other hand, would he have there been evident no temptation to rhetorical amplification, and solemn service. The minds and hearts of the people should be directed away from themselves and their own feelings, and toward God in adoration and worship. The pastor who has his congregation singing songs instead of hymns on Sunday morning is being untrue to his proper task of leading the people in worship. Trench says: "A 'hymn' must always be more or less of a Magnificat, a direct address of praise and glory to God." Such "songs" as "In My Heart There Rings a Melody" point people's attention to themselves and their own feelings. This has its place, but that place is not a Sunday morning worship service. Hymns like "Holy, Holy, Holy," "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," "Majestic Sweetness," or "Come, Thou Almighty King" point people toward God. That is what is needed at least one hour a week.

Lightfoot summarizes the distinction between the three words as follows: "While the leading idea of psalmos is a musical accompaniment and that of hymnas praise to God, ode is the general word for a song, whether accompanied or unaccompanied, whether of praise or on any other subject." Eadie comments: "The hymn was more elaborate and solemn in its structure than the ode."

"Speaking to yourselves" is probably better rendered "speaking to one another." This spiritual music is to be for mutual blessing and edification. "Singing" is the Greek verb acáo. It is used three times in Revelation (5:9; 14:3; 15:3) with the object ode. Aside from that it is found in the New Testament only here and in the parallel passage, Col. 3:16. It comes from the same root as ode and means, "to celebrate something or someone in song."

"Making melody" is one word in the Greek, paíntolés. The verb psallo meant first to strike the strings of a harp or lyre. Then it meant to "strike up a tune." Finally it was used in the sense "to sing." The phrase here could be translated "singing and psalming."

This is to be "in your heart." The relation of this to "speaking to one another" must be praise; 3. It must be to God. This is still a correct description of a hymn. It may not be out of the way to observe here that hymns, instead of songs, should regularly be used in the Sunday morning worship service. The minds and hearts of the people should be directed away from themselves and their own feelings, and toward God in adoration and worship.

Critical Questions
1. What is the meaning of the word here translated perfection?
2. Is this perfection, the maturity of ripened saintliness?
3. Does it signify completion in doctrine?
4. Is it perfection of Christian character?
5. By what means is it to be obtained?
6. Is perfection attainable, or is it merely an ideal?

Exegetical
The word perfection in Heb. 6:1 means literally "maturity" or "completion."

Why the writer urging the Hebrew Christians on to seasoned establishment, through growth in grace?
No. For they had not profited as they should from past opportunity for growth. Something was wrong. They could not go on as they were. They should have been strong men, but they were babes. No rugged endeavor can be expected of milk-fed infants, unable to take solid food.
Before the maturity of seasoned saintlihood must come a cure for dwarfed spiritual development.
By the same logic the Hebrew Christians could not go on as they were to consider deeper doctrines, or even (as many commentators explain the text) the completion of the writer's discourse; for they were dull of hearing (chapter 5:11). First some remedy must be found for that deafness of spirit.

The Greek of this scripture says "he borne along unto perfection." Dr. Wiley tells us that the figure is that of a ship in full sail before the wind. The Hebrew converts could not just shake off their weakness. It was too deep-seated for that. And it is not our self-effort that brings victory, but cutting the shoelaces, casting off worldly bag, lifting the anchor of unbelief and despair, without reserve to Christ, the Perfection of our faith.

The following sermonic study is a contest entry and therefore will be published without the name of the author. Pastors, are you working on yours?
The little word into (Greek, epi) settles the question whether perfection is attainable. We not only go on, but arrive. Perfection is no vague ideal, but a realizable and definite goal.

Homiletical Approach.

Three emphases seem outstandingly appropriate in preaching from Heb. 6:1.

First, exhortation. This text sounds the note of urgency heard throughout the book. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" Without "holiness, no man shall see the Lord."]
On to perfection! With no uncertain sound, we may trumpet the call to full salvation.

Let your uncataloged hearers catch a concerted, their great need from the strength of the preacher's convictions and the fervency of his spirit. Press for an immediate move.

Such a skeleton outline as this might be useful:

Man should go on to perfection because perfection is: (1) Preached in the Bible; (II) The Privilege of the Believer; (III) Provided by the Blood of Christ; and (IV) A Pattern for the Brethren.

Secondly, a sermon on Heb. 6:1 might emphasize explanation. This text is so clear and strong that it makes a natural introduction to a discussion of the meaning of Christian perfection. With sound scriptural background for each point, you might show that perfection is: (1) The Standard of God; (II) A Second Grace; (III) The Secret of Growth; and (IV) A Safeguard Against Going Back.

Thirdly, the first verse of Hebrews 6, with its "therefore" pointing back to chapter 5, supplies a expository message on the cause and cure of carnal babyhood. Connect the Hebrews with the Corinthians, who were babes in Christ, with the Ephesians, children tossed to and fro, carried about with every wind of doctrine; with the disciples before Pentecost, who could not hear what Jesus had to say to them. Here is a pattern of symptoms of the disease of carnal babyhood. The cure is perfect love; putting off the old man: receiving the Holy Ghost; in other words, going on to perfection. Picture the disease clearly. Then present the remedy.

Illustration

My neighbor Bill had been saved from a life of lying, profanity, child beating, and drunkenness. He showed the reality of his change by visiting (and shaving) me regularly, as for some months I was by doctor's orders confined to bed. I spoke to him of the second blessing, and urged him to go on to perfection.

"No," he would reply, "that's too high for me!"

Bill backslid, had family trouble, went back to his old sins.

Some years later, meeting my wife at a holiness camp meeting, Bill poured out a rejoicing testimony. He had been reclaimed. This time he had gone on to perfection. He was filled with delight. The experience that he had had too high for him had become in him a fountain of joy.

The Nazarene Preacher

The Changeless Christ

Introduction:

A. Notice His changeless power in the miracles of the New Testament:

3. Healing leper (Matt. 8:2-4).

4. Lazarus raised (John 11:38-44).

B. These miracles are different, but alike in that they show the changeless power.

C. Now notice this power in the scripture lesson for today.

I. His Changeless Drawing Power

A. Drawn to follow Him (v. 13).

B. This same power seen in following:

1. Zacchaeus.

2. Four bringing one.

4. Prodigal.

C. No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day (John 6:44).

D. "Calling today, calling today; Jesus is tenderly calling, is tenderly calling today."

II. His Changeless Transforming Power

A. To change a desert into a feast (v. 19).

B. To change a sinner into a Son of God.

C. Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things
Following, but Afar Off

INTRODUCTION:
1. Review entire chapter.
2. Bring special attention to Peter.
3. There are three reasons why he followed afar off.

I. His High Ideas of His Own State
A. Seen in the strife of v. 24.
B. Seen in his answer to Christ, v. 33.
C. Sermon taught in following:
   1. That Jesus and publican going to Temple to pray.
   2. Prodigious time he left and returned.
   3. "For whosoever exalts himself shall be abased; and he that humbles himself shall be exalted" (Luke 14:11).

II. His Dependence upon His Own Strength
A. Seen in v. 50. Was trying to protect Son of God with human strength.
B. Christ tried to warn him of this danger in v. 35.
C. Seen also in his failure to pray, in v. 46. Didn't pray because he was sure his own strength would do.

III. His Outward Strength, but Inner Weakness
A. Samson had similar problem.
B. Peter was self-willed. At Transfiguration he said, "Let us make three tabernacles."

C. Lack of self-discipline seen in failure to pray (v. 48).
D. His temper seen, first in the use of the sword, then in the cursing.

CONCLUSION:
This was Peter before Pentecost, but look at him after.
1. No more high ideas of own state (Acts 3:6).
2. No longer dependent upon own strength (Acts 3:12).
4. The answer to his following "afar off" was found at Pentecost.

another" is thus explained by Lightfoot:
"This external manifestation must be accompanied by the inward emotion. There must be the thanksgiving of the heart, as well as of the lips." That is, while one is singing these songs aloud, he should be humbling himself in his heart. Also, after singing together on Sunday we should carry a melody of song in our souls all the week.

V. The primary emphasis of all our religious singing should be giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ (v. 20). Probably it would be correct to say that all of us are behind in expressing our gratitude to God. The heart that is filled with praise to Him is a happy heart. One of the surest secrets of success and victory in the Christian life is forming the habit of thanking the Lord frequently throughout each day. Praise is a great dispeller of doubt and darkness.

IDEAS THAT WORK

Putting Sanctified Imagination to Work

While browsing through a secondhand store I spied an old neck-yoke, and immediately the words of our Lord were recalled, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. 11:29-30). I bought the yoke for $2.00.

Months later we were to visit the churches in the interest of home missions. The neck-yoke would catch people's attention; but I didn't expect it to continue to do its own preaching as the message was given. The neck-yoke was placed either on the pulpit or on an easel. Two signs, 8½ x 11, were made with one reading, "GOD," and the other, "ME," which were mounted where the two work animals would be fastened. For the load, a road map of the district was mounted on styrofoam. (The load could vary to fit your situation.) The Lord blessed our efforts and we raised nearly $5,000, which is one of the largest amounts raised in the history of the district.

Timely Telephoning

During the "I Will Stand by Christ" loyalty campaign, we were challenged to stand by Christ in a week of prayer in contrast to the disciples sleeping. To keep the people and myself aware of this challenge, I asked the people of my church who would sign their names and give their telephone numbers on a piece of paper that I had prepared. The paper had on it these words: "Dial my number—I will pray." At 12:30 noon each day I called them on the phone, but dialed the number and let it ring only one time. Then I hung up. When the person called 'started for the phone and realized that it was a reminder to pray, he paused and prayed. Thus at 12:30 each day the people of my church were praying for the growth of our church.

The next week we were to challenge ourselves to a week of witnessing. Following a sermon on soul winning, I again presented the piece of paper for name and phone number. The calling would be the same: dial the number, let it ring one time, then hang up. But this time the people received the call at 7:30 am, at which time they were to repeat the words of a song that I had passed out to them following the morning message. The words were written by Will H. Houghton and read as follows:

Lead me to some soul today;
Oh, teach me, Lord, just what to say;
Friends of mine are lost in sin;
And cannot find their way.

For there are souls that are crying
Melt my heart and fill my life;
Give me one soul today.

With these words as a prayer, offered each morning, we were reminded each day of our task as soul winners.

Through checking around and taking a poll, I found out that these ideas had worked. I know it helped me as a pastor and I believe it has helped my church.

MY PROBLEM

PROBLEM: As a pastor approaching middle age, and having just completed a second building program that necessitated neglecting other duties, I now find it difficult to re-establish habits of study and pastoral visitation. Any suggestions for help in this psychological problem?

A CALIFORNIA PASTOR WRITES:

I know all about the brother's problem, having been through three building programs myself! And the problem he cites is certainly a real one to any sincere pastor who desires to maintain his integrity in relationship to his task. The best means I found in this problem were twofold. As to relearning consistent study habits, I enrolled in a few college courses... really doesn't matter what one takes... but it does regulate one's time for study and preparation for whatever course one is taking. And by thus reestablishing these pattern with study, he finds it easier to adjust to such patterns as he imposes upon himself for his spiritual preparations. I found it most effective to start in with a certain book of the Bible, and give it the same scholarly approach—through research and reading and outlining and notes—as one must do in a college course or graduate study. I kept voluminous notes, and through I did not preach them as such, it is amazing how these results were reflected in my messages. Secondl, I have read much in varied volumes, which is a bit easier! As to redeveloping calling habits, let it be said that, for me, calling has always been a chore, and I have learned that it is for most pastors. There is but one way, and only one way I have found... simply do it! Make a list for the day, and follow that list as conscientiously as possible. My surprise was that, after the first few calls, the thrill and joy of communication with these needs grew, and it was difficult to stop. Many times have I gone on calling into the late evening because of the impulse gathered from these first difficult calls! There is no easy way to do pastoral calling, but it is always a surprise and a thrill as one encounters the needs of people and the implicit concern evidenced by that call.

PROBLEM: I expect to take a home mission church, and I probably will have to supplement my salary with secular employment. What kind of work is most suitable in such a situation? Are there certain jobs that should be particularly avoided—assuming that I have some choice?

Pastors, what do you say? Write your opinions. If published, a $3.00 book credit will be given. Not over 200 words, please.

HYMN OF THE MONTH:

"For the Beauty of the Earth" (1864)

(Praise and Worship Hymnal, No. 422)

AUTHORSHIP

Seven years before his graduation from Queen's College, Cambridge University, Pollock & S. Pierpoint penned the lines of "For the Beauty of the Earth," to be sung at Holy Communion services. It was first published with eight stanzas in Orby Skipley's Lyra Eucharistica (second edition) in 1844. Pierpoint, an educator who at one time was classcial master at Somersetshire College, was born at Bath in 1835. Although he made other hymn contributions, he is most widely known for this beautiful lyric. He died in 1871.

COMPOSER

Conrad Kocher, 1786-1872. Conrad Kocher, composer of operas and much church music, was born in Stuttgart in 1786. He studied a cappella music in Italy and taught music in Russia. This famous melody was first published in 1838 before it became a hymn tune. In 1851 it was published with the lyric "As with Gladness Men of Old," by William C. Dix, whose name (Dix), has become identified with the tune. Kocher died in 1872.

The stern Puritan starch has gone out of America and in its wake has left a jellied, sticky mass of sentimentalty.—Dr. Sherwood E. Wirt.

Acts speak of things imaginary as if they were real, while you preach too often speak of things real as if they were imaginary.—Thomas Hutton (1655-1710).

When God asks us for our treasures, loves in full surrender, He asks nothing less than His own enfranchisement in our hearts. As with Abraham, He may not remove our dearest love from us altogether. But He will remove it from the central throne where He alone would reign. He teaches us freely to give back to Him all that He has given us, only then to discover how blessedly we may possess all things aright.—Light Hervy Smith.

An Introduction to Evangelical Christian Education

The compiler, J. Edward Hakes, received his education from Wheaton, Eastern Baptist Seminary, University of Pittsburgh, and Columbia School of Law of Columbia University. His pastoral ministry has been in New York, Ohio, and Michigan. Presently he is chairman of the Bible and Philosophy Department of Wheaton.

Writers
The selection of the writers for the various sections was secured by polling the associates of the compiler. It includes such evangelical scholars as Carl F. H. Henry, Frank E. Gaebelien, Cornelius Jaarsma, Lois LeBar, Henrietta C. Mears, S. A. Witmer, C. B. Eavey, Gaines Dobbins, and twenty-four others.

Purpose of Book
To present to the reader the best in practices and theory of evangelical Christian education.

Organization of Material
The book is arranged around five terminals: (1) Backgrounds of Christian Education, (2) Preparing to Teach, (3) Understanding the Learner, (4) Organizing the Learner, and (5) Agencies of Christian Education.

There is a chapter dealing with the needs, program, characteristics, and curriculum for each age-group in the local church. Inclusion of chapters dealing with the agencies of the church other than the Sunday school, such as Sunday evening groups, camping, the Christian day school, recreation, vacation Bible schools, weekday youth clubs, and the home as an educational agency increases the value of the book.

One of the main values of the book is the extensive bibliographies for each chapter.

Although the writers are experts in their fields, it seems unfortunate that the book is so weighted with authors who are associated with independent publishers. This is reflected by such statements as, "Churches should not be bound by their own denomination's curriculum offerings, for each case is different. There may be times when an independent publisher's material will better fit the need of a particular church" (p. 159). Also a curriculum evaluation form for use in the local church is as found on pages 158-59.

BENNETT DUNNEY

Above Ourselves

James H. Jamney (Grand Rapids: Zondervan Publishing House, 1964, 150 pages. Cloth, $2.95.)

The subtitle of this book is "The Art of True Happiness," and numerous practical topics that are relevant to worthwhile living are discussed in a practical vein, such as "Keeping the Magic in Marriage," "How to Live with Children," and "The Nervous Breakdown—Causes and Characteristics." The thesis of the book is that only as people live to the full measure of their potential is happiness possible. All forms of unhappiness and frustrations stem from an inner personality machine that is limping on two cylinders.

The Nazarene Preacher

From the theological standpoint he identifies this inner breakdown as sin, which he defines as "rebellion against God's plan for man's life" (page 12). This rebellion he sees as being essentially pride.

Although the author is an evangelical and sound at most points, the book on the whole is psychologically oriented, and sometimes it almost seems as if he sees personality problems as being more psychological than spiritual. Here and there creeps in the apparent supposition that if people are only properly understood, loved, and challenged by being given both praise and a task their meanness will disappear. Actually this is only partially true, for the more underlying problem is the carnal mind, which will keep on poisoning the soul no matter how handled. One almost might be tempted to suggest that For Ourselves would be a better title. However, in spite of these faults, the book is well written, with some very striking aphorisms and with many practical insights into human relations. The preacher should read it in spite of its defects, as he will discover a better understanding not only of his own family but of his church family.

Hellbent for Election

P. Speckhard (Grand Rapids: Zondervan Publishing House, 1964, 183 pp. Cloth, $2.95.)

This religious novel is in the form of an allegory in which on earth the "believers," on their way to heaven, are loveless, selfish, and mean, while the unbelievers, on their way to hell, are quite decent. At least this is the way it seems to Hellbent, a "believer" converted in spite of himself, who after years of disillusionment with church members commits suicide, hoping to cancel his "conversion," because he would rather go to hell than live with the "believers" he has known. But after his death an angelic Counsellor is assigned to him for the purpose of persuading him that heaven won't be so bad after all.

There are some fine insights and subtle turns here and there reminiscent of C. S. Lewis. The scenes of the friendless child being ostracized at school, and of the bedlam in hell, are especially convincing and moving.

If the intention is to portray the hidden treachery and self-deception of the carnal heart, the book is a masterpiece. But its orientation is Calvinistic, either sincerely or satirically (it is hard to tell which). We are compelled to say that, if the Christian described herein represents the best that Calvinism can offer in this world, then this book is one of the most damning indictments of Calvinism ever written. Actually, however, the picture of petty believers is overdrawn; it is not fair to either Calvinists or Arminians. Hellbent (or the author) was unfortunate in his connections.

In his Preface the author makes the finest statement in the book: "I need to be shown a quality of life transcending laws; rules, regulations, ordinances, so that I might abide within all without any consciousness of any." Not a single character in the allegory has found this sort of liberty, and Hellbent (or the author) seems oblivious of the simple truth that this is nothing but New Testament Christianity, which has been enjoyed and exemplified by millions.

Out of the whole comes a growing conviction of the fantastic absurdity of the doctrine of non-forefatable eternal security based on one act of believing; and there is further the jolting discovery that the doctrine demands quite logically a complementary doctrine of some sort of Protestant purgatory, in order to qualify these hateful, spiteful "saints" not only to enter heaven, but even to be happy there.

Magnificent Promise
In this heart-searching and hard-hitting volume the perceptive editor of Decision gives a series of devotional expositions on the Beatitudes. He sees the Cross as the key both to their interpretation and to their fulfillment. You will not agree with all of his positions but you cannot escape the spiritual impact. No one can read the volume without receiving not only a profounder grasp of the Beatitudes but above all a deepened gratitude for the event on Calvary and a deeper understanding of its potential power in our lives.

Faith Is a Star

This volume proclaims the religious testimonies of some twenty-five outstanding Americans, from every walk of life, and from a wide variety of religious backgrounds. Naturally some of them could scarcely be called Christians from any truly evangelical standpoint, and some of their testimonies are more the expression of moral philosophy than of true Christian faith. It would be expected in such a compilation that some of the material would be pretty thin. However, some outstanding men in their field are included, such as William Ernest Hocking, Elton Trueblood, Paul Tillich, Lowell Thomas, and J. Edgar Hoover. Many are out-and-out evangelicals whose testimony rings true, such as Billy Graham, Mark Hatfield, Robert LeTourneau, Catherine Marshall, and Samuel Shoemaker. The book is valuable to the preacher partly as a means of understanding how the leaders of America think on moral and spiritual matters and partly as a rich source of quotes and illustrative material.

Take My Hands

The brilliant author of Dr. Ida does another fine job in bringing India to life, this time in the remarkable story of one of Dr. Ida Scudder's students, Dr. Mary Vergheese. This young woman from a well-to-do, highly intelligent, and cultured family in south India, traditionally Christian, found not only excellent medical training at Vellore Christian Medical College but also a vital experience with the Lord. This however involved much suffering, as a tragic accident at the very threshold of her professional career left her a permanent paraplegic. In spite of a series of painful operations which kept her bedfast and in constant suffering over a period of years, she learned to do delicate operations from her wheelchair and became one of the world's outstanding specialists in the restoration of crippled lepers.

Though the spiritual insight of the author leaves something to be desired, yet she not only does a superb job of bringing into sharp, poignant focus the suffering and courage of a noble character but provides a fresh and detailed insight into the needs and problems of India. Though this is not about a missionary, strictly speaking, it certainly can be classified as worthwhile reading for all lovers of India.

Another NEW Title in the "Exploring" Series

EXPLORING EVANGELISM

by

MENDELL TAYLOR, Ph.D.

Dean of Nazarene Theological Seminary
Professor of Church History and Missions

With today's compelling emphasis on evangelism, few books could be more timely. In this study, the historical thread of the spirit of militant Christianity is traced from the beginning of the Christian era through Luther, Calvin, Arminius, and Wesley, across to America and our present-day interpretation and methods.

Basic considerations of evangelism are explored. Among them are: the difference between revivalism and evangelism; soul-centered and pulpit-centered evangelism; night-after-night revivalism; use of the altar; origin of the camp meeting; basic theology of evangelism; the work of the Holy Spirit; evangelism the common heritage of all denominations.

Highlighting the final chapter, attention is focused on the Church of the Nazarene and its vital role in the total program of evangelical Christianity.

Following the Annual Church Calendar

By J. B. Chapman*

There is an appeal in seasons to practically everyone. There is no time when a sermon on the Resurrection will fit the mood of men quite so well as at Easter, and there is no time when a sermon on any phase of the life of Jesus will seem quite so fitting as on Christmas Sunday. And yet there is a tendency to casualness that is weakening. It is as though people were expecting a sermon on the seasonal theme and were more or less prepared to resist its appeal. This is the other side of the proposition, for any preacher is dead as soon as he persists in doing only the usual and expected.

Christmas is a children's festival. The day commemorates the birth of a Baby, and there are many touches of childhood in every attempt to observe the occasion. Let it be so. Make it even more so. Make the children feel and know that the church recognizes them and needs them, and that Christ is concerned for them.

But I am just in the way of suggesting that there is a law by which things are seen more clearly in contrast than in any other way. And now and then perhaps one will try it this year—it is a good thing to draw a picture with Christmas as the background, but with a theme that is in contrast. Think what a good time Christmas Sunday would be for preaching a missionary sermon! A few words about the glorious privileges Christmas represents to the followers of Christ, and then an abrupt turn to the subject of our consequent debt to the world, a picture of the indifference of the Church, of the needy and dying world, or of the general selfishness of mankind. Then an appeal and—a Christmas offering for missions. This would be a surprise to the people but it might be a welcome and useful surprise. Then Jesus himself frequently spoke of his second coming right in the same connection with reference to his coming as the Saviour of men. So why not a sermon on the "Second Coming of Christ" at Christmas-time? There would be, of course, the opening references to the birth in the manger; then there would be set up the hope and prospect of his soon coming in power and glory.

But I think the theme should be either a seasonal one or else one on some opposite phase of Christian truth. A mere ignoring of Christmas is crude and dumb and offensive. Either fall in with the prevailing channels of thought or else strike out boldly to cross them. Do not drift into the usual channels of one who is not awake. The most stupendous event in the history of our earth is the visit Jesus Christ made to it, and the principal nations of the world date their letters and their legal documents from the calculation of Christmas. The occasion is worthy of all the emphasis it is possible to give it.

Christian Education at Christmas

SOMETIME AGO a father told me that when his little boy discovered there was no Santa Claus he burst into tears. When his father protested, "Don't take it so hard! It isn't that bad, is it?" The boy replied: "I don't care about Santa Claus! But what about this Jesus story?" His little mind perceived that if one was lied to the other could be too.

Children love fantasy, but they also want reality. They enjoy pretense but intuitively distinguish between pretense and a lie. As Christians therefore we had better be cautious about mixing too much fiction with fact in our Christmas celebrations.

If we associate Santa Claus with our Sunday school Christmas programs, and weave a lot of fairy tale coloring in with the Bethlehem story, we will be saturating the emotional and associational patterns of our children with a mixture half pagan and half Christian. As they get older we expect them to outgrow their childish delight in all the imaginary trappings. But the whole thing has become part of themselves; it all determines the content of their memory and their nostalgic attachments; it all is part of the associational pattern which will trigger their emotional reactions even down to old age.

As children emerge into young adults they may tend to discard the true with the false, maintaining a tender memory of both, without discrimination. Or the attempt to disentangle the true Christmas from the pagan Christmas, and keep emotionally alive to the one while fostering sophistication to the other, may be a heart-rending, almost traumatic experience.

We can't control what the world does; but the Church, at least, had better go all out to direct the attention of the children to Christ, not Santa Claus.

A Word About Our Book Review Policy

WHAT ONE READS is what he is becoming. This is terrifyingly true of preachers. Their mental fare (even if it's largely TV and the newspaper) will inevitably structure both the content and viewpoint of their preaching. Provide a list of a preacher's current reading, and an accurate forecast of the tomorrows in that man's ministry is easy. Not only the present impoverishment of much preaching can be explained, but many tragic defections could have been predicted, even years before there were noticeable outward signs.

If laymen need to build themselves up on their most holy faith, how much more imperative it is for the preacher to do so. But if a preacher reads books which undermine his faith, he is not building himself up on it. His reading should confirm, strengthen, and enlarge his faith, not weaken it.

Down the Road to Bethlehem

A Christian Christmas to you—
Go down the road to Bethlehem.

It's quiet there,
Except for angel-songs in lofty key,
Outsinging far the shepherds' jubilee.

It's wondrous there,
Where wise men kneel, their endless journey through,
And rise, how changed! The heavens and earth are new!

It's holy there,
As Mary whispers, ripe in prayer, in fear,
"The riddle of the world lies answered there."

Go down the road to Bethlehem:
It's God who's there.

When You Celebrate

By Fred Smith*

To CHRISTIAN CHURCHES the opportunity comes often to celebrate worldly and educationally the main events and symbols of their faith. It is to be regretted that not all churches take full advantage of this recurring privilege. Through the past decade I have had opportunity to visit churches of various denominations at the special seasons of the church year, and I have taken special notice of the way in which they celebrated the significant events of their faith. From these observations I have gathered the following suggestions:

My first observation is for church leaders to link themselves definitely, yet not dogmatically, to the cycle of the main events which tend to increase the strength of their Christian faith. Some denominations make a ritualistic and liturgical point of observing, in full, the Christian year. Some church leaders however do this in a perfunctory way. It is expected of them to go through the arrangement. They do their duty, and that is the end of the matter. Somnolence is induced in the congregation instead of spirituality.

But this can be avoided. First, let us look at the festive season of Christmas. If your church observes Advent, all the better for the observance of the Christ-coming season. I am thinking here not only of the apt use of hymn, scripture, and sermon, but of the visual approach of this season. This is the season wherein the coming of the Christ child can be objectively presented in an aesthetic and educational way.

I recall going into a church where the Nativity scene that was (I found later) very much worthwhile. Parents were specially exhorted to take their children.

Summing up my observations later I found myself asking why the Nativity scene had been made a side-show, so to speak, instead of being made central in the worship service. This particular presentation was worthy of a place either on or around the altar. Instead, there was a decorative setup at the altar that was a worthwhile presentation of beauty, but it had no religious significance. It did not present the Nativity scene. I have observed that some churches at this season present the Nativity scene in some convenient location at the side of the church. That is at least a position where it can usually be seen. But my preference is to make this event of the coming of the Christ child central in the church as it is central in the Church's faith.

Another great festive season of the Church is Holy Week, as it culminates in the glad service on Easter. In most communities where palms are available, Palm Sunday is made educationally and aesthetically significant by the appropriate use of palms on that day. Coming to the Thursday service of that week, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper can be made historically significant by making this observance a special one.

A healthy perspective—the best cure for "promotionitis"

There's No Promotion

By W. Lee Gann*

For days letters and telephone calls had been coming in from all over the country extending congratulations as a result of having received the honor of being appointed successor to Dr. Melva Brown of the Hawaiian District. Some of those messages contained the word "promotion," which was sincerely expressed. Thinking of the greatness of the men who make up our corps of district superintendents and the strategic work they perform for the church, I supposed there was a sense of promotion involved.

Then it hit me! Last Sunday night after a long and trying altar service, one in which the devil seemed to refuse to give way, and didn't until after much and hours of intense prayer, a young lady who had prayed through asked for a few moments' conference in my study before going home. She was quite "broken up," and as I waited for her to compose herself enough to talk to me I subconsciously turned a name plate around until it faced me. There it was—my name and under it one word, "PASTOR." For the first time since receiving word of my appointment it dawned upon me that within a few weeks I would no longer be a pastor. The thought of all the promotions involved completely overwhelmed me until I fell forward on my desk and wept. I think the young lady wondered then who needed help most.

In a brief moment of retrospect I recalled twenty-three years and eight months without a single Sunday that I was not someone's pastor. From that first little home mission church with eight members, no church, no parsonage, and no salary, right through to congregations of somewhat larger proportion, I recalled serving people as their pastor in a way I could not have done in any other capacity of service. I remembered weddings, dedications, baptisms, funerals, all-night vigils with the sick, opening our home to the homeless, showing concern to those who felt no one cared, and on and on the list went.

Even at that moment, here was a young lady with whom I had patiently worked, counselled, and prayed for a year and had seen her come from a person of deep moody and suicidal tendencies to a person emotionally relaxed, having found the peace that had troubled soul through Christ.

Though I consider my new assignment to be an honor, and a task to which I will give my best, I still contend that there is no promotion from the pastorate. So, though it will not be appropriate for a while, I'll keep that name plate that contains my name and the word "PASTOR," for someday possibly, in the providence of the Almighty; I might get "promoted" again and once again have the privilege of being a pastor.

A profound experience simply described

The Baptism of Pure Love

Grant Swank*

Peter said:

Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently (1 Pet. 1:22).

In this short Epistle, Peter very pointedly encouraged his readers to "love . . . with a pure heart . . .

This brief admonition stated quite simply the doctrine of sanctification in capsule form, especially when one considers the two primary words, "pure love."

Unfortunately it seems to be that, in the opinions of some, the doctrine of sanctification is regarded as being so complex that one can hardly begin to explain it. Now it is true that our language is never adequate to explain fully any religious experience. Our words fall too short. They are mere midgets when placed up against the realities themselves. Nevertheless we do use words to explain other areas of life, whether it may be the most complex theorem in geometry, or a formula in chemistry, or theory of psychology. Therefore we cannot afford to hesitate to use language in clarifying the realms of the Spirit. To merely dismiss the sanctified life as being "better felt than told" is to do injustice to the power of language and to the minds which the Lord gave us.

Actually, as in the case of most of the New Testament message, the doctrine of sanctification can be stated quite simply. In the words of Peter, sanctification is pure love.

To take either word without the other may be somewhat disastrous. For instance, if we were to speak of sanctification only in terms of purity, we could slip unconsciously into the groove of legalistic thinking. That is, in order to be certain that we were always pure, we would be going around constantly with some type of measuring stick to see if we measured up to the level of purity. Now there is nothing wrong with "taking stock" of our spiritual conditions. In fact most of us, have our negligence at this point. But there are those few unhappy individuals who are always measuring themselves and, unfortunately, others as well.

Sanctification is not legalism. To be sanctified does not mean being tied to a measuring rod so that one does not enjoy the liberty of the Spirit. For one to make sanctification synonymous with a set of rules is to miss the very life force of sanctification.

Sanctification involves keeping to a set of rules. Yet it means much more than this. Sanctification involves being introspective, and yet much more. For rules, "step" signs, yardsticks, and plumb lines all by themselves may keep one from doing wrong; but left by themselves they produce very little light, life, and love.

*This essay was awarded second place in the 1963-64 Nazarene Theological Seminary essay contest.

The Nazarene Preacher

That is why we must consider the second word in the brief phrase "pure love." Love is the dynamic, the life force of sanctification. One does not keep himself unspotted from the world by sitting in a corner whipping his back with five lashes morning, noon, and night. But one does keep himself pure because of love toward a loving Father. Love puts the loyalty in purity. Love puts the life in purity. Love gives purity its radiance; glow, and courage to remain pure.

However, consider the expression without the word "pure." This would let "love" remain alone. This love, unguarded by the force of purity, can degenerate into mere sentimentality. It then becomes a counterfeit, pseudo-love, a love gone astray, "unstable in all its ways." Persons with such diluted love give merely lip service to God. Their actions are governed by the weather or feelings. They pray when they feel like it or if in a tight squeeze. They go to church when in the whim or when there is nothing else to do. They read only the twentysixth psalm or some other familiar passage, but rarely go out of their way to revel in other jewels of the Scripture. They are preachers; and if so, usually for personal gain. They run to God when the bombs are about to fall; but when peace reigns throughout the earth, their allegiance is pitifully slight.

"Pure love"—the words can hardly be divorced. They are like magnets attracting each other. Purity needs the life flow, the impetus, the force and glow of love. Love needs the discipline, the "grass tacks," the courage and genuineness of purity.

"Love one another with a pure heart fervently."

How does one experience this pure love set free by the Holy Spirit? Here again we realize the simplicity of the gospel. Commitment is necessary. If one makes a complete surrender, God will respond in accordance with His own exact timing, with His Spirit of pure love.

Complexity, however, may appear here at two instances which are both under the control of the seeker. First, complexity may arise because of unwillingness to commit everything. However, this point is considered briefly; for if one wants to hold on to some earthly idol, whether popularity with the crowd, an evil habit, pride in one's looks, wardrobe, new car, house, or occupation, then that is exactly what he will do. Consequently he is not in the truest sense a seeker, but merely a dabbler with the idea of commitment.

The second complexity may arise by the seeker's sincere attempt to "work up" within himself the baptism with the Holy Spirit. He may frustrate himself, by yielding to all kinds of needless tension because he is trying so very hard to control God's timing. God asks the seeker only to commit his all. God does not tell the seeker to tell Him when to make the Spirit's baptism experienced.

For some individuals the Spirit works with pure love while they are making their way to an altar of prayer. Perhaps they whisper a prayer of commitment to God during the sermon. When the invitation is given, they find themselves experiencing the baptism with the Spirit as they step out from where they have been sitting to pray at the altar.

Others may experience the baptism while at the altar, after praying for possibly one, ten, or perhaps fifteen minutess. The Spirit breaks into their awareness with the fullness of His pure love. These persons leave the altar testifying to the fact that they committed everything to God, God in turn responded with His presence in sanctifying fullness.

Yet there are others who come to an altar in all honesty. They come to commit themselves. In their own minds they are certain there is nothing between their souls and God. Yet there is no difference in their emotions. They do feel a sense of relief in that they know for certain that a commitment has been made. Other than that assurance, however, there is no difference experimentally.

At this crucial point it must be made plain that God is in control of the timing of the Spirit's baptism. There must be no allowance for defeat or despair. Instead, after praying his prayer of commitment, that individual must rise to his feet, leave that altar, and go home. He must promise God that in the days ahead he will meet regularly in prayer each day. He will pray in a spirit of confidence, realizing that if he is faithful in seeking, God will make himself known in a definite way so that there will be absolutely no doubt as to the experience of the Spirit's baptism.

Satan must not be given a wedge, with which to cause the seeker to retreat, surrendering to the devil rather than to God. If the individual is faithful in prayer, in the course of God's own exact timing, the Holy Spirit of pure love will be experienced. This is the promise of God. He will baptize. Only He knows when the seeker is in the most appropriate position to receive the precious gift of pure love. A period of a few hours or days may be needed before the individual understands the actual implications of complete surrender. God's timing is never wrong.

The essence of sanctification may be stated simply: It is pure love given by the Holy Spirit to the believer. To emphasize purity; without love is to stress legalism. To emphasize love without purity is to stress sentimentalism. Pure love in the heart of the believer is God's presence in sanctifying fullness.

The baptism with the Holy Spirit is the experience of receiving God's pure love. The occurrence of the baptism is in keeping with God's exact timing. Only God knows when the believer is ready to receive the baptism. However God's promises are sure; therefore the believer must continue in regular times of prayer until God sees that the believer's heart is ready to receive this baptism. God's pure love is so precious that it can be given only to those spiritually responsible persons who realize the actual involvement in total surrender. Shallow, irreligious seeking will never result in the baptism. Only earnest, confident prayers will result in the baptism of pure love.

You can't trust your emotions any more than you can your intellect as the way to God. The way to God is solely through the Word of God.

Christian Communication in the Light of the Incarnation

By David K. Kline*

Part One

REVELATION is the result of the divine desire to make known, to communicate. The incarnation of God in Christ is the supreme act of revelation and communication.

The purpose of this article is to consider these two propositions and to focus attention on their close interrelationship.

Basically, the word "communication" comes from the same root as "fellowship," and it implies the idea of having "community" with another. It is always used to refer to active participation of two parties. The results of this fellowship between two or more active partners always depend both on the cooperation of the receiver and on the action of the giver, sharing being necessary to the fulfillment of a purpose or its denial. Therefore communication, whether between God and man (incarnation) or man and God (existential relationships), is mutually active participation.

Paul urges his fellow Christians not to forget to communicate "to the necessity of the saints" (Rom. 12:13). He also exhorts his student friends in Galatia to communicate with their teachers in "all good things" (Galatians 6:6). The writer to the Hebrews likewise reveals to his readers that they can please God himself if they will remember to do good and to communicate with others (Heb. 13:16). In each of these three examples the idea in the original is association with others, in terms of aid and relief, in things which are of mutual concern.

This same word, "communicate" or "fellowship," is used to describe our mutual relationship to God.

Peter urges believers to be "partners of Christ's sufferings" (1 Pet. 4:13); this is, we are to be in communication with, to have fellowship with, Christ in His sufferings. Heb. 2:14 points out that this is right and just; for we are sharers in (have communication with) His death, so Christ for our sake partook of the same death.

Negatively, in I Tim. 5:22, Paul exhorts us never to partake of (be in communication with or become implicated in) or be a party to others' sins, or others' evils. (See also II John.)

Mutual concern is always in evidence where believers are in vital communication with Christ the Lord. Good deeds, acts of giving, sharing, concern for the best interests of others are evidence of a vitally Christian situation.

Christianity is not really vital unless it is communicating this atmosphere of love and good works. "Behold how they love one another" is the Early Church picture of Christianity in action. The Christian society of that day was giving forth a living witness to Christ—was communicating His message of love, goodness, and living hope to the world.

Christian communication with our Lord is thus obviously seen to be the source of Christian works and in itself has validity and necessity. Since God's communication demands action, however, it is not static or complete in itself but must be shared with others to fulfill its inner nature. This Christward communication, must be expressed in person-to-person relationships of goodness, long-suffering, mercy, and a general attitude of trust and love-in-action.
with others, "especially ... the household of faith" (Gal. 6:10).

It is the same in the Old Testament, where we see Ezekiel, who "sat where they sat," identifying himself with the people and their concerns in order to communicate God's message to them. Also Jehu advised Moses to relate himself both to the people and to God—"Be thou for the people to Godward" (Exod. 18:19).

Thus in both Old Testament and New Testament there is a similar picture of the Christian sense of communication. It is based on a sense of mutual concern and of sharing others' problems, with the power and thrust supplied by identifying oneself with the message and purpose of the eternal God.

Consider some of the acts of God, which define His purpose to communicate.

Actually, the above definition of the word "communicate" is a revelation of the Old Testament God in action—God communicating himself to needy mankind. It was "in the cool of the day" that the Lord God was wont to reveal himself to Adam and Eve. The Creator-God was walking in a garden He himself had made. His purpose was to establish contact, to converse with the human beings which He had also made. Herein is revealed a significant part of the divine desire to communicate, to make His purpose known to man.

In Genesis 12 the Lord said unto Abraham:

"I will make thee a great nation;" I will make thee great named; and I will bless thee and thy name."

Abraham understood the message—the call of God—and obeyed. He "departed . . .and went forth" unto a land and life he had not previously known. Why? Because he understood and obeyed God's inner communication.

At a later time Moses said to God, "What is [thy name and what shall I say?]" (Exod. 6:13) God's answer means, "Eternal, the past, present, and future, always with you" (see v. 14).

On the strength of this, communication Moses and Aaron were able to say to Pharaoh: "Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Let my people go." And as the people went, the eternal God was in communication with them in various ways: The glory of the Lord appeared in the cloud by day and by night in a pillar of fire" (Exod. 13:21); there were "thunders and lightnings, a voice spoke to them," also, "Moses spake to God," and "God answered him by a voice" (see Exodus 19). Then Moses "wrote all the words of the Lord," and the laws and judgments of God were for the first time put into literary form.

Throughout the Old Testament we often read, "The Lord spake . . ." Listening men of God discerned His message and communicated it to others. Time after time we read that to a prophet came "the word of the Lord." Jeremiah prophesies: "The days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant . . .and I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts" (Jer. 31:33). These words were written down and, passed on from generation to generation. Thus a divine literature began, and the Revelation was objectively conveyed to others in written words.

Then "in the fulness of time" the manifestation of God's will and self was fully revealed in Jesus Christ. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory)," (John 1:14). The Word became flesh and was a new manifestation of eternal existence. The Word—Logos—that was absolute in existence "with God" in eternity, "pitched a tent," as it were, in human history and "dwelt among men."

The "Word" was God's direct self-revelation to man. This was His self-communication: to be heard, "the Word"; to be shared, "the life"; to be seen, "the light"; to be worshipped, "the Son"; to be obeyed and loved, "the only Begotten"; to be accepted in full understanding and faith, "the Lamb." In this historical act we see the "Divine Encounter" of God with man, God's evaluation of the need to communicate, and how He accomplished it.

In general, the purposes inherent within divine communication are as sure as revelation itself. God-in-action in His Son has so evaluated His plan to reestablish fellowship with man that there can be no question of God's purpose, or method if we will but receive the same as communicated.

Great hearts make great pastors

Guideposts to a More Effective Ministry

By Raymond C. Kratzer*

No. 11. Shepherd Hearts

Perhaps the most biblical description of the minister is that of a shepherd or a pastor. Both the Old and New Testaments emphasize this aspect of God's servant, which reaches its apex in the exemplary life of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, who is the Chief Shepherd of souls. We are His undershepherds.

Peter in the mellowing years of his life writes to the elders these warm words of wisdom: "Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock; And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (1 Pet. 5:2-4).

The Oriental shepherd possessed a love for his flock that has no counterpart in our methods of sheep raising today. Ours has become a mass program with little emphasis upon the individual sheep and its needs. I am wondering if the same change is taking place in the relationship of pastor to people in this souped-up age. The emphasis upon administration, promotion, quotes, etc. has a tendency to blur the main issues. There is danger of becoming solely an administrator, rather than a pastor or shepherd.

Although the work of the Church is the biggest business in the world, we dare not correlate its basic purpose with that of the secular business world. We are in the "work of the Lord" and our values are not always parallel with the measuring devices of the world. How can you measure love, sacrifice, devotion, or altruism? These are qualities and emphases that might not pay off in terms of dollars and cents; but in God's accounting records they will find themselves on the credit side of the ledger in the eternal payoff, and here and now the involves is found in the words of Jesus when He said, "I come not to be ministered unto, but to minister . . .," and, "He who would be great among you, let him be your servant of all." "Minister" and "servant" are somewhat synonymous.

At times this aspect of the ministry is overworked. Some church members think the preacher is a choir boy because he has time to do a lot of things that others who work out cannot do. In our first pastor some asked our son, Ron, what his daddy did. In his four-year-old language and insight, he said, "He preaches (preaches) and cleans the church." I remember one elderly lady of the town who thought nothing of asking me to take her to a distant city 80 miles away. When we got home after driving 160 miles and wrecking the day as well, my purse, she would hand me $200 and say, "Here's the pay for your trip." Don't mention it. I just wanted to do that for you." Evidently she thought my car ran on its reputation.

However, the matter of being of service is a part of the ministry. And I have never felt that I was giving too much to do some menial task, to run some errand, to wear out my car bringing people to Sunday School, etc., because I learned years ago that you can't get ahead of the Lord. If you serve, you will discover that things come back to him that more than compensate for what he has done.

I can think of two or three fellows who had the idea that when they entered the ministry with their credentials in hand, with a call and the approval of the district superintendent, they would not let people run over them. They made up their minds to demand a certain wage and would permit no over-demands on their energies. People must respect their position! Well, all I know is that they are out of the ministry today.

I recall a story of a young man who was a doctor and, upon completion of his training, came to a small community to begin his practice. An older doctor had been there many years and had a monopoly on the business. Consequently he did about as he pleased and did not strain himself to be of service to his patients. He ridiculed the idea of another doctor coming into the community. But when the first call came to the young physician, he hitched his horses in a mad rush and hastened at top speed to the sick person. People said, "You'll wear out your horses, take it easy!" He replied, "Life is at stake, and I can buy another pair of horses." Soon his practice was so large that he could hardly care for it, while the other doctor was practically out of the picture.

Pastor, don't be afraid to expend yourself beyond the line of duty. Serve eagerly, even if others fail to appreciate it. God's a-writin' all the time. Anyway, if you have a shepherd heart, you will share because you care.

Concern and diligence in your present assignment will pave the way to greater usefulness in the outreach of your ministry. It is a sad commentary on a minister who considers his present pastor a steppingstone to some other church. Much ineffective work is the result of "eyeing" some dream church with fond hopes that your present drudgery will be solved someday by a move to this utopia. The sure way to solve this problem is to make your present church the ideal that beckons you.

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson in summing up the various aspects of the pastor as a shepherd says this includes being a watchman, a guard, a guide; a physician of the sheep, a saviour who leads in rescue, a feeder of the sheep, and a lover of the sheep. Three of these aspects stand out in my thinking: viz., that of guard, physician, and feeder.

The matter of being a guard in the shepherd relationship of the pastor includes the guardianship of one's own life and spirit. The fact that "consistency is a jewel" is nowhere more sparkling than in a pastor's home. There is nothing sadder than a pastor's family who must bow its head in shame at the double standard held by the head of their church and home. He should strive to make his relationship to his home and the home itself "Exhibit A" of God's original institution.

The protector spirit of the shepherd should exert itself when danger comes to the flock. There are times when the entire church becomes involved in great issues and is threatened by some wolf who would divide and destroy the group. These are times when the pastor must seek God's help in a greater measure and use extreme caution in saving the whole. Then there are the times when individuals are threatened by a lion or a bear. Many of these issues can be solved through prayer and directed preaching anointed by the Holy Spirit. If personal counsel is needed, loving care should be the order without making a church issue out of it, if this can possibly be avoided. And it usually can be.

The second aspect of the shepherd-pastor that is so important is that of being a physician of the sheep. The minister operates in the area of hurt hearts and troubled minds. In this regard he is not to consider himself an authority on psychiatry or mental illness. On the other hand he should not throw up his hands too readily and suggest that some who come to him, should see a psychiatrist; for there are many times that the psychiatrist throws up his hands and sends his patients to the minister. Remember we have God.

Again it should be said that great care needs to be used in administering cures. If Tim. 2:24-26 instructs: "And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will."}

In the third place the pastor with a shepherd-heart will be a feeder of the sheep. I think one of the finest compliments that I ever received unworthy though it was, came from one of the spiritual ladies of the church, a licensed minister and a wonderful Bible student. She said in my presence to someone else: "My pastor is a wonderful Joseph. He shovels out plenty of grain to his people to feed their hungry souls." I went home that day determined to keep the storehouse of my mind and heart full, so that when I preached to my people, they would receive grain, rather than straw or chaff. With such a supply within reach of heart and mind, we are without excuse if people come to us for bread and they find the cupboard bare. Let us learn to lead our people to green pastures, beside the still waters. Let us keep our own souls nourished on God's
The Writer Needs Ideas

Without ideas, writing has no more point than does a hen trying to set on a brick. Some of us try to substitute emotion for ideas; we get all excited, splashing word after word across the page, never saying a thing. Then there are those of us who have nothing to offer except big words, dug slowly from a dictionary; the mussy mark of our offerings leaves the poor editor gasping for air. But ideas, freshly new ideas—here is the greatest secret of successful writing.

Every acceptable article requires an idea, an organizing core to give it significance and coherence. But some of us who would write make a different mistake; recognizing the importance of a good idea, we try to crowd all of our ideas into one article, to tell everything we know in the first thousand words. It will grant you that some of us have so very little knowledge that we could easily do this; still, good writing must be something more than complete hodgepodge.

We find ideas all around us; we have only to keep our minds and ears open. But the idea then must become our own! We often get ideas from our reading or from hearing others speak. But only when that idea manages to seep into our being, only when it has taken on significance in our own lives, does it become the root and core of a useful article. The writer does not simply retell a story he has heard, or recount a scene which he has witnessed. He takes over that idea or that scene, and makes it his own. He breathes into it his living self; the writer finds a skeleton, and clothes it with sinew and muscle.

II. The Writer Needs Skills

I have found that writing is a good deal akin to preaching, my own calling. The successful writer, like the successful minister, builds for himself a good vocabulary. I do not mean at all that he must become a collector of words for the mere words' sake, I can remember only too well one lad in a practice preaching class, 'lo, these many years ago, whose sermon was so filled with ripened verbiage that even our professor began nodding. If a congregation does not understand, the minister's sermon has no meaning; and if the reading public cannot understand, the writer's story will never get past the editor's desk.

A newspaper reporter gave me a tip along this line last fall. He had noticed that some of my articles sounded rather "preachy," and suggested that I go through every piece, when it was completed, underlining every word of four or more syllables. Then I was to rewrite the article, trying to replace those longer words with shorter ones, or with phrases made up of smaller words. As he put it, "George, most people who buy magazines and newspapers have barely finished high school; they won't know what you are talking about. After all, you wouldn't use a big-gamile rifle for rabbits, would you?"

We have almost no need at all for those grand-sounding words and phrases, but we do need to work constantly at building our vocabularies with the common language used every day by folk around us. When I start to write of a tree, I can

How to Write for Publication

By George C. Desmond*

Nearly twenty years ago I was employed as a precision inspection foreman at the big Dodge-Chrysler plant on the south side of Chicago. We made motors for the B-29 airplane. One day our departmental bulletin board carried a huge poster which set us all to laughing:

A chair is such a benefit,
A downright handy place to sit
For those of contemplative minds—
Especially with tired backs.

Now believe me, those folks were not wanting us to spend more time sitting around on our backsides. But today I find that the chair is one article of furniture which proves itself a great asset to the would-be writer. For the only way a man can learn to write is by writing; he must write, and write, and write some more. The man who gives up easily will never become a writer.

How does one write? How does one find the secret to unlock the rusty, barred doorway of an editor's stony heart? What are the secrets whereby the professionals find checks instead of rejection slips in their morning mail? Believe me, the way

Word. When we stand before the great Shepherd of the Skies, He will say, "Well done!"

The pastor with a shepherd heart will know his sheep. He will study, their strengths and weaknesses. It goes without saying that individuality is a God-given endowment. Some persons by nature have great qualities of leadership. They are fearless and outgoing in their approach to life. Others are timid, shy, and prefer working in the shadows. Each of these extremes and all of those in between should be considered in the light of their greatest strengths when tasks are assigned. Sometimes those who work in the shadows do a greater work than the extrovert. The shepherd will seek to elicit the cooperation of all, so that their service will be relaxed, joyous, and blessed of God.

A warm heart that yearns over the members of his church; always eager to see each person grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord, will encircle with cords of love the loyalty and devotion of those over whom he ministers. I spent a few days visiting with a pastor in the homes of his congregation. He didn't stay long, but there was a warm glow in the whole contact. Before we left, he called all of the members of the family to stand in a circle, and as we clasped hands, prayer was offered. Melted hearts evidenced the strong ties of love between pastor and people which revealed to me a part of the secret of his great success in building a growing church.

May God help our pastors to consider themselves as under-shepherds of the great Shepherd of souls. May they be touched by the needs of others and love so deeply that, when in the providence of God, they must leave, they shall ever be remembered as pastors with a shepherd heart.
say only once that it is big. Then I need some other word to express its size. The tree becomes immense, a giant, tall and stately, spreading its beauty across the evening sky. Its branches become green, with arms reaching toward the blue heavens; its gaudy crown scrapes the rainbow from the sky; it spreads protecting arms over a weary earth. When I write like this, my reader’s eyes begin to see the majesty of my tree. He no longer hears words; he sees pictures.

It is at this point that writing becomes a great adventure. The beginner must build his vocabulary, but he must also master the art of expression. An idea is a cold, dead sort of thing until a writer picks it up. The author molds words about it, as a sculptor molds clay about a wire frame, giving the idea body and beauty.

During my freshman year at the University of Illinois a speech instructor told a group of us that there were three basic rules for public speaking. He called them the “Three Cs”—“Be Calm, Be Clear, and Be Seated.” Good expression means clarity, simplicity. Get to the point, say what must be said, and then stop.

III. The Writer Needs Tenacity

That simply means patience, the willingness to keep on working. I write only a little, regularly. My working average is something just over a thousand words a week. I am a minister, and writing is a hobby, not a profession. But still I manage to keep about 60,000 words in the mails. (At the moment, my records show that I have 67 articles out, with a total of 63,400 words.) If I intended making a career of my writing, I would want to triple both my regular output and my total mail load. Writing is an armchair job, but it offers no career to the lazy man.

The man who would write needs tenacity; he must keep constantly at work, constantly cheerful, constantly believing in himself. But there is one more little note to add to this matter of tenacity—the successful writer is one who simply hounds the editor to death. When an article returns to my desk, I am not satisfied until I have it in the mails again. I read it over, sometimes decide that it isn’t worth wasting postage on, then must rewrite it. But always, within twenty-four hours it is back in the mails, on the way to another editor. I have never yet sold an article from my desk drawer, so I do not let articles rest there.

Ideas, skills, tenacity—these are the secrets of the successful writer. But to put it very bluntly, so plainly, that it cannot be mistaken, this simply means—(1) get an idea; (2) write it down; and (3) get it in the mails. There is no other way.

expense of depth; only depth can save breadth from becoming mere shallowness.

Let the preacher begin with reliable holiness literature. Then let him branch out as his time permits. But he should not begin abroad, then give the leftovers of his time and interest to the home base. If he does, he will first affect boredom with the home base, then by and by discover that his own personal home base has moved to the spiritual and doctrinal ground that he once thought of as foreign soil. Which gets us back to where we started: What a man reads is what he is becoming.

CHRISTIAN SERVICE TRAINING

Practical Church Music

By Elizabeth R. Nelson
Associate Professor of Music
Pasadena College

Adapted for Christian service Training by J. Fred Parker, Practical Church Music is the new text for Unit 136a, "Music and the Church." The book has an amazing spread from practical, down-to-earth suggestions for songleaders, pastors, and choir members to technical matters such as rhythm, timbre, and intensity.

For the young adult groups who wish to use the 6:30 hour on Sunday evening for training classes, a Leader's Guide has been prepared by R. W. Stringfield, manager of the Music Department of the Nazarene Publishing House. The guide offers practical suggestions for teaching the course in six lessons. You will find it in Young Adult Topics for the present quarter (October, November, December).

Other Leader's Guides prepared for publication in Young Adult Topics for the next three quarters are:

Unit 122a A Brief Survey of the Old Testament
Text: The Story of the Old Testament, by Winchester
First quarter, 1965 (January, February, March)

Unit 141.2a Teaching in the Nazarene Sunday School
Text: The Sunday School Teacher, by A. F. Harper
Second quarter, 1965 (April, May, June)

Unit 122a A Brief Survey of the New Testament
Text: The Story of the New Testament, by Ralph Earle

JOIN HANDS FOR 1965

Another year is almost over and the Department of Evangelism wants to thank you for your cooperation and fellowship in the task of evangelism throughout 1964. It has been a blessed year of opportunity:

* Did you take part in the September 20 day of revival and mail your return postage-paid card to the Department??
* Did you observe November as “Moving Nazarenes” month??
* Did you send to the Department of Evangelism the name and address of EVERY nonresident member and every nonresident Sunday school scholar??
* Did you participate in the great commitment made by all at the Department of Evangelism Rally on the Tuesday evening of General Assembly??
* Have you observed the Holy WATCH NIGHT (six hours of prayer) on the FIRST day of each month in your church since July??

We do thank God for all that He has done. We are challenged by the many new possibilities for evangelism during 1965. Let us boldly JOIN HANDS to seize every opportunity to “Evangelize in the Power of the Spirit.”

At this Christmas season as we share together in the great good news of evangelism, “unto you is born . . . a Saviour,” may we join hands to do more in the glad new year ahead.

It was the day before Christmas 1963; an evangelist opened an envelope and found an unexpected check enclosed. It was from the thoughtful pastor of a church where he had held a revival in October of 1963. The check was for ten dollars . . . BUT the real thrill was a small note attached to the check which read, "Knowing you do not have a congregation to remember you at Christmas time, our board is delighted with the suggestion of the Department of Evangelism to remember each evangelist that served us during this year. Happy Christmas!" It was signed by a pastor. Read again YOUR letter from the Department of Evangelism and remember a simple Christmas gift from a thoughtful local church may bless an evangelist and his family.

BIBLE SOCIETY OFFERING

December 13 has been designated as the Sunday for the annual offering for the Bible Societies. As a church we have benefited greatly by the work of these societies in translating, printing, and distributing the Word of God. Without a denominational tag, the societies quietly go about this indispensable work. In these tumultuous days, there are people in every land who have read the message and believed on Christ because of this ministry. Let us do our part in the Bible Society Offering.

In the United States our churches have benefited directly by the American Bible Society, through the gift pulpit Bibles it has supplied to all newly organized churches since 1951. There are over 1,250 of these pulpit Bibles now in use. We say a hearty "Thank you" to the American Bible Society for this generous act. Let's show our thanks in the Bible Society Offering.

MERRY CHRISTMAS FROM HOME MISSIONS

Do you want your church to do something extra for Christmas and know the joy and blessing of giving to others? Give something to a home mission pastor on your district. Or write to the Department of Home Missions for the name of a pastor on the Gulf Central District to whom your church may give a Christmas gift. Or help on an approved overseas Home Mission special.

December, 1964
DEAR NAZARENE PASTOR:

In a week or two, your copy of a news story about the denomination's gains and record during 1964 will reach you by mail. This article will be printed in your newspaper if you will help.

Please take it to your editor (weekly) or church newsman (daily) on Monday or Tuesday, December 28-29.

Your newspaper probably will be more interested in gains in the local Nazarene church during 1964, so we suggest that you type it out, double-spaced, using one side of the paper, a summary of what your church has accomplished during the last year (highlights of your assembly report), and take this along also.

BE CAREFUL if you are in an area with two or more Nazarene churches that are served by the same newspaper(s). In this case pastors should work up an area summary for all the church and then select one of their number to call on the editor.

The best time to use this story is between Christmas and New Year's Day, but not later than January 8.

For any pastor who does not have a calling acquaintance, at least, at his newspaper office, the 1964 year-end release is a natural beginning.

Also now available free at the N.I.S. office in Kansas City are copies of the revised "Notes on Press Relations for Nazarene Pastors."

Prayer-like a Fountain

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of.
Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain night and day.

These words, on the cover of a dedication program, caught my eye. Then they recurred so persistently to my mind that I began to realize they had a special message for me. They are a quotation from Tennyson's Morte d' Arthur. They speak to Nazarene women, to Nazarene preachers' wives.

"Like a fountain!" What imagery! What a telling simile!

Water is mentioned more frequently in Scripture than any other natural resource. It was recognized as essential to the life of man, of his flocks, of vegetation. Canaan was described as "a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills."

Water was a favorite symbol. Jesus spoke to the woman at Sychar of a "well of living water," within, "springing up into everlasting life." The "cup of cold water" given in Christ's name describes Christian charity. Paul spoke of watering the seed of the Church: "I planted, Apollos watered." The voice like unto the Son of Man is described in Revelation "as the sound of many waters," and here also appears the figure of "the river of the water of life."

Now a fountain is a jet of water which springs upward as the result of pressure. This pressure may be created by a pump. Many beautiful fountains in our cities are operated by powerful electric motors which play and replay the same water into the air in a dazzling display.

December 10, 1964

(857) 93

But a natural fountain gushes up because of the weight of a great amount of water collected at a given source—it may be some distance away. The water of the fountain, lifted forcefully by the pressure of this reservoir, will rise then toward the sky as far as the hidden source is above the ground. The spontaneity and irresistible power of a natural fountain constitute one of nature's wonders. At Van Cluse, in Southern France, several hundred thousand gallons of water shoot into the air every minute from a circular pool, surrounded by lofty cliffs. Then the water flows off through a ravine to form twenty brooks.

One of the distinct memories of my childhood, spent in north central Iowa, was of a fountain out in the woods, down near "Fugitive Rock." We called it locally an "artesian well." None of us knew its hidden source. But we did know that a sizable jet of water spouted into the air, fifteen or twenty feet. We knew that it never ceased flowing day or night. We knew, too, that our long, hot summer days did not dwindle the flow nor were the freezing temperatures of winter able to stop it. I have walked out on a cold day to see that the living water, pressured from the strong hidden reservoir, had burst through the icy sheath that encased it, and still flowed free.

Let thy voice rise like a fountain day and night.

There are two things that supply the pressure for our fountain of prayer—faith and praise.

We must believe if we are to see the glory of God. We must believe that more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of, that prayer does change things. We must believe that we personally have the power to pray that kind of prayer. We must by cultivation of the deep inner-pools of our nature collect the spiritual pressure for such an effective prayer.

But the resource for this faith lies not in ourselves, in our goodness or our accumulated spirituality. It rests in the Word of God, in our unshakeable conviction that His promises are true and that they are for us. We must be so aban doned to the Spirit of God that His will becomes our will; His desires, our des	ire. His purposes for the Kingdom’s advance can then be worked out through our prayers, because of our achieving faith.

Such a concept of prayer elevates it far above the realm of mere asking for personal gratification or advantage. The source of spiritual pressure lies deep in the purposes of God, and hence the fountain of our prayer rises high and reaches far.

There is a strong and significant relationship between praise and prayer. The Psalmist says, “We will rejoice in thy salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners: [then] the Lord fulfill all thy petitions.” (20:6). Paul in the Philippian utter urges, “In every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God” (4:6).

It seems a paradox that, with the heart heavy with burden and often bowed down with grief and concern, there should also be mingled the expressions of praise, adoration, worship, and rejoicing. But the flow of thanksgiving seems to move the heart of God. David said, “I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth. My soul shall make his boast in the Lord: the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad. O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together. I sought the Lord, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears. They looked upon him, and were lightened: and their faces were not ashamed. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.”

And at last, when faith and praise have achieved, victory is assured. Then glory wells up out of the soul, even before the evidence of answered prayer has been seen, just as it was in Israel’s taking of the city of Jericho. The command of the Lord was to compass the city, going round about it once a day for six days. This the people did. Joshua said, “Ye shall not shout... until the day I bid you shout; then shall ye shout” (Josh. 6:10).

And on the seventh day when, according to the word of the Lord, they had compassed the city seven times, then Joshua said unto the people, “Shout; for the Lord hath given you the city” (Josh. 6:15).

“So the people shouted when the priests blew with the trumpets: and it came to pass, when... the people shouted with a great shout, that the wall fell down flat...and they took the city” (Josh. 6:20).

More things are wrought by prayer Than this world dreams of.
Wherefore let thy voice Rise like a fountain night and day.

I AM RESPONSIBLE
Life is a gift, yet it brings inescapable involvements and responsibilities. I am indebted to God, who gave life to all people who share life. I am involved with the generations gone before and those who follow and am enamelled with all society.

It is true that I could deny my responsi bility without stopping the universe, and could leave my tasks for others without doing great violence to eternal schemes. It is entirely possible that, if I left my work undone, another might come who would do it better than I could have done it, but he cannot bear my responsibility. Others may do my work, but only I can fulfill my own obligations to God and others. There may be excuses for limited ability, but there is no excuse for irresponsibility.

TOWARDS BETTER BIBLICAL SCHOLARSHIP

Studies in the Sermon on the Mount

By H. K. Bedwell*

No. 7  Matt. 5:33-37

Speech and the Christian

The importance of speech cannot be overestimated. James in his Epistle tells us that the hallmark of perfection is a controlled tongue (Jas. 3:2). In Prov. 18:21 we read, “Death and life are in the power of the tongue.” In the passage we are now considering Jesus indicates the kind of speech that is expec ted of a Christian. There are many points where the difference between an unbeliever and a believer ought to be apparent, but nowhere ought it to stand out more clearly than in speech. Jesus insists on five characteristics here, which must mark the speech of His followers. They are:

1. Restraint in Speech

“Whatever evil is more than these is of the evil one” (5:37, ASV). Moffatt translates, “Whatever goes beyond that springs from evil.” It has been truly said that we rarely repent of speaking too little, but often of speaking too much. For even more spiritual power is lost by God’s people by too much talking than by any other way. A steam engine is driven by the pressure of steam created in the boiler. That pressure can be maintained only by the control and direction of the steam. Open all the valves and, though there will be plenty of noise, the power will soon be gone and the engine come to a standstill.

Wesley constantly affirmed that it is impossible to continue long in conversa tion without falling into the sin of gossip and criticism. “In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin” (Prov. 10:19). Self-discipline is necessary in every department of the Christian life, and especially in the matter of speech.

Socrates declared that there are two sciences, the art of speaking and the art of holding the tongue.

2. Simplicity of Speech

“Let what you say be simply ‘Yes’ or ‘No’” (5:37, Moffatt). It is the custom of the Oriental to embellish and enforce his words by many forms of oaths. The Jews constantly swore “By heaven” or “By the earth” or “By Jerusalem” or “By my head.” It was held by them that an oath containing the name of God made their words binding, whereas they did not consider themselves so bound to carry out their words when lesser oaths were used. Jesus exposed the sophistries of this position. In using the word “heaven” they really included God, for it is His throne. In using the words “the earth” they included Him too, for it is "his footstool." It is part of His kingdom. In using the name of the Holy City, Jerusalem, they again included Hiram—for it is His city. The same applies to the head—He is the Creator of it. The owner of the head cannot change even a single hair. The use of these extravagancies of speech among one who always tells the truth. The very fact of an oath being necessary strongly implies that the user is not always so particular about the facts. We folks of the Western world do not use an oxymoron to emphasize our speech in the same way, but their place is taken by profanity. There are some who cannot speak more than two or three words together without dragging in some word or the name of God or of Jesus. Many so-called "slang" terms have very doubtful origins. The command of Jesus is to refrain from this form of speech. Shakespeare said truly, "The truth needs no colour."

*Nazarene missionary, Stedl, Swinbank, South Africa.

December, 1964

3. Sincerity of Speech

"Let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay." This means when you say, "Yes," mean yes; when you say, "No," mean no. Sincerity is often sacrificed in the cause of politeness. When we say to our visitors, "I'm delighted to see you," do we really mean it? Again, how easy it is to make promises that either we do not intend to fulfill or we have not the power to make good! Children, especially are affected by this lack of sincerity. They are not slow to remind us of our promises! If they do not remind us of a promised punishment, it is not because they have forgotten! You will soon be reminded that they have taken note of your failure to implement your promise, by the ignoring of your future threats!

How rare it is to find sincerity of speech in business! "It is bad, 'tis bad; says the buyer; but when he goes away, then he says, 'h'n.'" (Prov. 20:14, RSV.) The businessman who falsifies his statements concerning what he sells or buys is sacrificing his soul for material gain and will pay the inevitable price. Then again, we need to practice sincerity in our profession of religion. How easy it is to claim with the lips more than we possess in our hearts! Sincerity is the face of the soul, whereas dissimulation is the mask:

4. Accuracy of Speech

God is the "God of truth." (Isa. 65:16) Jesus declared himself to be "the truth." (John 14:6.) One of the titles of the Holy Spirit, given to Him by Jesus, is "the Spirit of truth." It is not surprising then that God requires truth in the speech of His children. Jesus called the "father of lies," so it is to be expected that His children would be familiar with the use of them! The Word of God clearly declares that the liar has no part in the kingdom of God (Rev. 21:8). Jesus insisted that we should be accurate in our speech, and we should realize that there are more ways of evading the truth than by telling downright lies. Exaggeration has been called the blood of falsehood. It is the pitfall into which anyone can easily fall. This is especially so when the faults of others are under discussion. The opposite of exaggeration is minimalizing, or hiding the truth. Strangely enough the practice of minimalizing comes into play when the good qualities of others are being discussed. Sometimes failure to reveal all the truth will give an entirely wrong impression of a situation. A half-truth may be even worse than a lie. The Psalmist speaks about speaking "the truth in heart" (Ps. 62:2). When the Spirit of Truth fully possesses the soul, the speech will be true, for it is out of the abundance of the heart that the mouth speaketh.

5. Decisiveness of Speech

There are two words that we must all learn to say with decision—YES and NO. No one is more disappointed than an undecided person. The Christian has some affirmations to make. He is called to confess his Saviour in a scoffing and antagonistic world. He is called upon to say, "Yes," to the right in the face of all opposition. Moreover he must know how to say, "No," to the devil, and those whom the devil will use to drag him into the ways of sin. To many tells us about a character, called "Mr. Facing Both-ways." There is no place for such a man in the kingdom of God.

These are the characteristics which should mark our speech—restraint, simplicity, sincerity, accuracy, and decisiveness. To a very large extent, on our adherence to the principles here set out by Jesus will depend our usefulness and dependability. This is doubly so in those who are called to speak for the Master, whether in private or in public. If our hearts are filled with God, we shall never speak because we have to say something but always because we have something to say. The exhortation of the Apostle Paul is always up-to-date. "Let your speech be always with grace seasoned with salt, that ye may know how to answer every man." (Col. 4:6.)

Think all you speak, but speak not all you think:
Thoughts are your own; your words are so many;
When 'Wisdom steers, wind cannot make you sink;
Lips never err, when she does keep the door.

Gleanings from the Greek New Testament

By Ralph Earle

Eph. 5:21-23

Submission or Subjection?

"Submitting yourselves" is the present middle participle of hypotasso, which is thus defined by Abbott-Smith: "a military term, to place or rank under (Polybius), 2. to subject, put in: subject. . . Middle, "to subject oneself, obey." Most of the recent versions (e.g., RSV, NEB, NASB) use "subject" rather than "submit." The King James Version does this in verse 24, where the verb is the same as here.

Love in Marriage

After telling the wives to be in subjection to their own husbands, Paul confronts the men with a much more difficult demand than this. To them he says: "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church." As we see in Mark 12:38, where a word meaning "wish" is rendered by "love," there are two verbs that are translated "love" in the New Testament—agapao and philao. Agapao is found 142 times (in the received text). It is rendered "love" 135 times and "beloved" 7 times. On the other hand, philao occurs only 25 times. It is translated "love" 22 times and "kiss" 3 times.

In classical Greek there is a third verb for love, eros. Concerning this term Cremer writes: "Eros denotes the love of passion, of vehement, sexual desire; but so unsuitable was this word, by usage so saturated with lustful ideas, to express the moral and holy character of that love which with Scripture in particular has to do, that it does not occur in a good sense even in the O.T., save in Prov. iv. 6 . . . ; and . . . not at all in the N.T."12

Trench is in essential agreement with this. Regarding the nouns of eros and philo in the Greek Old Testament (Septuagint) he says: "It is part in no doubt to be explained from the fact that, by the corrupt use of the world, they had become so steeped in sensual

The new word is the noun agape, of which Trench says: "There is no trace of it in any heathen writer whatever." Similar is the statement of Cromer: "not found in profane writers." But Trench wrote one hundred years ago (1856, 1858) and Cromer nearly as far back (1861, 1864, 2nd ed., 1781). Today these statements may need revising. Arndt and Gingrich say: "Now we have an inscription that is surely pagan"—from the third century A.D. But agape can still be spoken of as practically unknown in pagan sources. It is used some sixteen times in the Septuagint, all but five of these in the Song of Solomon. The verb agapao is used nearly three hundred times in the Septuagint.

What is the difference between agape and philo, the two verbs for love in the New Testament? It is noted above that philo is three times translated "kiss"—all in connection with Judas Iscariot's betrayal of Jesus (Matt. 26:48; Mark 14:44; Luke 22:47). This gives a clue as to the distinctive meaning of the term. It describes the love of the affections. On the other hand, agape expresses the love of the will. Cromer sums it up well in these words: "Philoia denotes 'the love of mutual inclination, affection, love, so to say, originally spontaneous,' involuntary (amare); agape, on the other hand, love as a direction of the will (diligeri)."

The most thorough recent treatment of agapao is to be found in the first volume (1964) of the new English translation of a monumental work—Kittel's Theologisches Woerterbuch zum Neuen Testament. (English; Theological Dictionary of the New Testament). Here are found thirty-four pages of closely written material on this term.

The greater part of the article on agapao is written by the famous German scholar, Eitelbort Stauffer. He says: "Eros is passionate love which desires the other for itself." He also writes: "Eros seeks in others the fulfillment of one's longing. Agape must often be translated 'to show love'. It is a giving, active love on the other's behalf." Christ "loved the church, and gave himself for it."

The verb which is used twice in Eph. 5:25 is agapao. From the above discussion it will be seen that this means something more than affectionate love, though this is included. The emphasis is rather on an intelligent, voluntary love. This is the kind of love that will last. Feelings fluctuate. Emotions ebb and flow. Affections are often affected by changing circumstances. But the love of the will can remain firm and loyal throughout every vicissitude of life. This is the kind of love that a husband is commanded to have for his wife. It is an unfailing love that seeks the best good of its object. This kind of love will hold a marriage together "as long as ye both shall live."

After discussing the proposed difference between agapao and philo, Abbott-Smith writes: "If this distinction holds, agapao is fittingly used in NT of Christian love to God and man, the spiritual affection which follows the direction of the will, and which, therefore, unlike that feeling which is instinctive and unreasoned, can be commanded as a duty." 11

One further thought might be suggested here. While we cannot directly control our feelings, we can control our thoughts. The man who thinks loving thoughts about his wife will experience loving feelings toward her.

Perfect Rest Now

Text: There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God (Heb. 4:9).

Critical Questions

I. What is the rest here mentioned?

Who are the people of God for whom it remains?

Exegesis

The Greek word sabbathianos translated rest in Heb. 4:9 means a Sabbath rest.

It is not, however, the Sabbath day. Neither is it the rest found by Israel in the promised land. For long after both the Sabbath day and the land of Canaan were well known, God spoke of a rest not yet enjoyed.

It is not rest in heaven, for it is urged on men still facing the battles of this earthly life.

It cannot be the rest brought by regeneration. The persons addressed were regenerated; yet they needed something more.

To quote a saintly scholar, the late H. Orton Wiley, "he touches the mountaintops of the experience described in our text:"

1) It is a Rest for the People of God.

It is not for sinners, but for the rich heritage of every true child of God. ... 2) It is a Rest of Faith ... a perfect rest in a finished atonement. (3) It is a Rest from Sin. That burdened, sin or depravity remains in the heart of the regenerate is a generally admitted fact, and from this inward pollution the heart is purified by the baptism with the Holy Spirit. ... (4) It is a Continuous Rest in God through the atoning work of Christ.

Toward Better Preaching

The following sermon study is a contest entry and is therefore published anonymously. Remember the deadline is December 31.

This rest is evidently an essential part of normal Christian experience; for the Hebrews were faltering and fainting without it.

This Sabbath of the soul was in some sense presented to the Jews of old. But it is most clearly taught and strongly emphasized in this gospel age. It is outstandingly for us.

The people of God are evidently not merely those who profess religion, but persons clearly convicted.

Homiletical Approach

The inspired writer's argument is a made-to-order outline for a holiness sermon. Simply clarify the translation (e.g. Jesus in verse 8 means the Old Testament character Joshua), and you have a strong scriptural message which could be entitled "Signposts to Soul Rest."

(1) The Sabbath day is a signpost, pointing to soul rest in that it is a day of rest, reverence, and reunion (see Isa. 58:13). (2) The land of Canaan is a type of this soul rest because Canaan was promised, pure, permanent, and provided by God. (3) The experience of conversion points forward to the second rest because it imparts (a) deliverance from corruption and drawing toward cleansing; (b) a duality of character and desire for cessation of conflict between flesh and Spirit; and (c) a delight in Christ to be satisfied fully only in the deeper communion of heart holiness.

It may be emphasized that neither the Sabbath day, the promised land of Canaan, nor the experience of pardon for sin is an end in itself, but is satisfactory only as it leads on to the second blessing.
Again, a beautiful picture of soul rest is that of the Old Testament love slave. After seven years' labor the servant faced a choice. He could go free—back to running his own life, to the mismanagement, the poverty, perhaps the vices, which had brought him to bankruptcy and bondage; or he could give himself as a servant forever to his master, whose goodness and wisdom he had found far better than his own.

The converted soul with light on his face faces a similar choice. He may either walk in the light, and give himself without reserve to his Master; or go back to being his own boss, with all that involves.

Rest is reached by decision; true soul rest, in this case, by the right decision.

The converted person, like the love slave, (1) passes from turmoil to tranquillity as he abandons himself to 'be wholly and forever the Lord's;' (2) moves from anxiety to assurance as he receives the seal of acceptance, the anoint-mark in the ear (connect this with the circumcision of the heart); (3) finds duty turned to delight as he enters a new, close relationship to his Lord; and (4) passes from care to commitment as he looks entirely to his Master for direction; and the supply of every need.

Illustration

Along with the preacher's own definite testimony, the experiences of others clearly sanctified persons will add interest, bring conviction, and translate in detail the doctrine of the second rest. The bibliography contains a few suggestions of source material for such experiences.

Some of the great songs on soul rest may be helpful. "Oh, Sweet Rest!" (Sacred Duets—Lillenas) makes a good special song; and for congregational use it is hard to improve on "Oh, Sweet Rest!" and "Sweetly Resting" (Praise and Worship—Lillenas). George D. Watson's testimony in verse is excellent, and deserves wider use:

A Love Slave to Jesus

O sweet will of God! Thou hast girded me round

Like the deep moving currents that girdle the sea,
With omnipotent love is my poor nature bound,
And this bondage to love sets me perfectly free.

And now I have flung myself recklessly out
Like a chip on the stream of the Infinite Will;
Past the rough rocks with a smile and a shout,
And I just let my God His dear purpose fulfill.

Forever I choose the goodness of my God,
Its holy, deep riches to love and to know,
The serenade of love to so sweeten the rod
That its touch may quench rivers of honey to flow.

Roll on, chequered seasons, bring smiles or bring tears,
My soul sweetly sails on an infinite sea.
I shall soon touch the shores of eternity's years,
And wear the white throne of my Saviour abode.

A love slave to Jesus I gladly will be,
A love slave to Jesus, rejoicing and free;
I'll love Him, I'll serve Him, through all my glad days,
And in masses of glory sing forever His praise.?
This is to be found as a song in Bernard's Melodies, and in a different arrangement in Worship in Song.

No Room for Christ

There was no room for them in the inn (Luke 2:7).

No room in the inn, 2:1-7. No room in the world (Matt. 2:16; John 1:12; Matt. 8:20). He lived as a stranger not quite thirty-three years among men, when He was ignorantly and brutally driven out of this world, and from that time to this there has been little room for Jesus among men.

I. Men Have No Room for Christ

1. There is no room for Christ in men's thoughts (Isa. 1:3). The mind of man is always more or less active; but multitudes give no place to Christ in their thoughts.

2. Room for Christ in conversation. Room for politics, business, neighborhood gossip, but not for Christ (Ps. 66:16).

3. Very often no room for Christ in business. Few are willing to admit Christ as a Partner in their business. He would object to some of the ways of doing business. He would not allow the firm to misrepresent its own standing. He would not take advantage of the ignorance of a customer.

4. No room for Christ in the amusements of the day. People want amusement; therefore: horse races, balls, theaters, etc. But no room for Christ at these places. He would convince them of their folly, and convict them of sin.

5. No room, for Christ in literature. Today perhaps ten unreligious books

III. Jesus Produces Branches ("NEEZUS") (NAZARENE)

1. We are the Branches, Nezera, Nazarenes.

2. We are to let life flow through us.

3. We are the branches reaching to the world.

Conclusion: We of our day are called to be branches.

Let us be faithful to that wonderful, meaning-filled name.

I. THE RESURRECTION AND THE LIFE

Text: Jesus said unto her, 'I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live (John 11:25).

Mary, Martha, and Lazarus were among the few intimate friends of Jesus. And when Lazarus died He restored him to life again.

I. JESUS IS THE RESURRECTION

He proved his resurrection power.

1. By raising the dead. The widow's son of Nain (Luke 7:11-15), Jairus' daughter (Matt. 9:19-25), and Lazarus.

2. By His own resurrection (Mark 16:6).

3. He is the pledge of a general resurrection (1 Cor. 15:16).

II. JESUS IS THE LIFE (John 14:6)

1. He is the Source of all life (John 1:3-4).

2. He is the Supporter of all life (Acts 17:28).

3. We are sustained, daily, by His grace.

4. He is the Joy of life.

III. THE BENEFITS OF A TRUE FAITH IN HIM

"Though he were dead, yet shall he live."

1. The spiritually dead shall live. "By faith are ye saved, through grace." Those dead in trespasses and sins are born into the family of God.

2. Their bodies shall be raised again and they shall live forever in heaven (Rev. 21:1-7).

Have you realized Christ's resurrection power in your heart?

Is He your Life and your Joy now?

denomination first. When the people become increasingly proud of their heritage and conscious of the families of God and their expanding future, then it's time to sell the Publishing House as the second phase of your educational program. Post pictures of the new General Board building, paid for through "our" purchases. Advertise to your teachers and members and friends that "we helped build this" (and other efforts) because "we purchased supplies from our own publishing house." Tell of the great contributions to reading, through book publishing, the aid to foreign and home missions, the development of literature that helps our own people understand the teachings, beliefs, and doctrines of our faith that have made us stronger as the years have passed. Third, give your superintendent and supervisors the packets of materials for each department (available from the publishing house in file folder containers). Ask them to give serious study and prayer to these. See if they are not better than, or at least comparable to, anything new being used. Tell your teachers frankly if you want to use the best possible materials. Tell them at this point also of our obligation: to do whatever we can to advance our own church. Convince them, by comparison, that our materials are better. They will want the best too. As a last resort, change supervisors gradually over a period of several years until you get genuine churchmen filling these posts of such great importance. I do not believe you can be left in the market for our people, but I am convinced that our materials are the finest, and our own work deserving of our support. Don't tell them! Show them!

PROBLEM: How can an incoming pastor change the Sunday school literature from the non-denominational publishing house to Nazarene literature without causing a division in the church?

AN IDAHO PASTOR ADVISES:

Education! Educate your people, starting with the superintendent; then move on to the supervisors and let them help you "sell" your own materials to the teachers and workers. This won't be done overnight, but it is far superior to giving "orders" to use our literature. Make people think it is their idea, or better still, let them contribute their idea, through education and promotion, to use our "own" literature. First, let them know we are a denomination. This is not a bad thing, as some would have us believe, but it's the very thing that gives us great outreach and potential. It joins us with thousands of others for strength greater than our own. Sell the

This man meets with the pastor on Monday for assignments.

Assignments: Visiting-four families on church fringe, two unchurched, and two member families. What they hope to accomplish by these visits is decided upon. These families will be visited between Monday and Sunday. The lay assistant will have charge of the prayer meeting and make hospital calls at pastoral request. On Sunday the lay assistant is platform manager. In morning worship, he leads announcements, leads responsive reading, and takes the offering. In the evening service he has a complete charge. The song leader always leads the music in both services.

Our program goes in fits and starts, and certainly depends on talent and dedication of the lay assistant, but I believe it works reasonably well.

MY PROBLEM

PROBLEM: How can I educate my people to sing and appreciate the standard hymns of the Church?

Enroth's Note: "My Problem," has become OUR problem. Some very fine discussions have been received, but not enough to do justice to this column. Also, we are beset by tinniness. Some of the best discussions have not been used. If contributions are to be used they should be received within... thirty days after the problem is published. Pastors, do you believe this feature is helpful? Your response during the next few months will be interpreted as your answer—and if the answer is negative we will introduce something else. Remember, not over 200 words, please. A $3.00 book credit will be mailed to each contributor whose answer we publish.

The earliest text of "Adeite Fideles," written in 1751 by John Wade, is in a manuscript deposited at Stonyhurst College, entitled "Canticum Divinum pro Dominica et Festis per Annum." Wade, who lived at the Catholic center of Douay, France, was a teacher of Latin and a transcriber of manuscripts including music.

No less than a hundred translations of this classical gem have been made from the Latin; however the text that is best known to English-speaking Christians is the translation of Rev. Frederick Oakeley of Shrewsbury. The Hymn Tune: "Adeite Fideles" (Portuguese Hymn)

Composer: John Francis Wade, 1711-86.

Although there have been conflicting claims as to the composition of this music, there seems to be strong evidence that this is an original work of Wade, whose vocation involved the transcribing of musical manuscripts for others. He included this hymn in a manuscript that he copied for the English Roman Catholic College at Lisbon, Portugal, and in 1785 a copy was sent to the Portuguese Chapel in London. This introduced it to England and to the world and perhaps gained for it the name "Portuguese Hymn." It is ideal for Christmas caroling, programs, and public services.

Christmas Instructions

Take time this Christmas to go a little way apart,
And with the hands of prayer prepare the house which is your heart,
Brush out the dusty fears, brush out the cobwebs of your care,
Till in the house that is your heart it's Christmas everywhere.

Light every window up with love, and let your love shine through,
So those who walk outside may share that blessed light with you.
Then will the rooms with joy be bright, with peace the heart be blessed,
And Christ himself will enter in to be your Christmas Guest. Anonymous

---From the Missionary Worker

Just before Christmas a college professor received the following on an examination paper: "Only God knows the answer to this question. Merry Christmas." Across the paper the professor wrote: "God gets an A and you get an F. Happy New Year."

The Saviour's Birth

Oh, that birth forever blessed!
When the Virgin, full of grace,
By the Holy Ghost conceiving,
Bore the Saviour of our race,
And the Babe, the world's Redeemer,
First revealed His sacred face,
Eternally and evermore!
From Prudentius: "Of the Father's Son Begotten"

Whatever weakens your reason, impairs the tenderness of your conscience, obscures your sense of God, or takes off the relish of spiritual things, in short, whatever increases the strength and authority of your body over your mind, that thing is sin to you, however innocent it may seem in itself.

The Last of the Year

The Christmas tree is taken down;
The needles had begun to fall.
Back in the boxes on the shelves
Go candle, star, and crystal ball.

Tonight upon the stroke of twelve
The bells and whistles will begin
To ring and blow the Old Year out
And ring a lovely New Year in.

In this Old Year, I wonder if I have done always as I should.
In this New Year that is to come
O Lord, may I be kind and good.

When You Celebrate

the congregation gathers to commemorate and celebrate the sacrament. This service can be made the more impressive by the use of lighted candles arranged in the shape of a cross upon the tables.

Thus far the Christian year. The cycle of the natural year, it should be remembered, is also God's year. This can be made significant in various ways in the church. I will mention but one, that of harvest.

I come from a country in which "the harvest festival" is well observed. In many parts of the United States this is not done. When the observance is introduced, provided it can be done artistically, it is received with joy which is more than pleasure. Try it by arranging at the appropriate time a well-designed cornucopia on the altar. Other evidences of God's creative power and goodness can be added to the sanctuary by those who have the know-how of these things.

Thus one could enlarge upon this worthwhile and educational aspect of church life. Special events in the church's local and denominational history could be visually presented. In the United States there are many opportunities for special patriotic visual presentations. For the vital ongoing of your church, I say, use all these occasions, making sure, however, that the final result is also the finest result, which is spiritual nurture and evangelism.

By S. D. Gordon: "Let us never forget that the greatest thing we can do for God or for man is to pray. For we can accomplish far more by our prayers than by our work. Prayer is omnipotent; it can do anything that God can do. When we pray, God works."

One of the richest experiences of the pastor at Christmas is the perennial fresh discovery of the love in the hearts of his people for him and his... The gifts, bought so lavishly and presented with such shining eyes, are exciting, just in themselves... But that warm, cozy glow of happiness and that strange tightness in the throat cannot be traced merely to the gifts... Behind them is a divine cord of affection that is not of this world... It is this tender tie, manifest in so many delightful ways, that dissolves in the tears of holy joy every pain and disappointment... There is no sweeter sound than the words, “Our Pastor... It is doubtless if life can offer any nobler being to men than this relationship... But there somewhere is another man of God, also a preacher, who does not hear these words, nor receive these magnificent gifts... His self-sacrifice in preaching his heart out while living out of a suitcase helped the church reach this level of unselfish love... He must buy gifts—maybe contribute to the gift for his pastor—yet during this season when he needs money the most his income has stopped... I don’t want to tell anybody that I am talking about the evangelist, of course... I have a notion that the pastor will enjoy his gifts just as much, and bask in the warm glow of his people’s love with a little clearer conscience, and sleep on Christmas Eve with a little lighter heart, if he has given forethought to his brother-preacher, and followed the suggestion on p. 27... Ten dollars—so little missed by the remembering church, but such a boon to the remembered evangelist... Let’s see—twenty churches served valiantly in a year—twenty grateful churches saying, “Merry Christmas,” with a check—that’s $200... Not much, yet, enough to help make Christmas cozy and bountiful, rather than strained and meager... Enough for a car payment, a new winter coat for the wife, maybe Susan’s teeth fixed, (at least one, at today’s prices); or those much-needed storm windows... Certainly the evangelist and his family already cherish in their hearts a jewel of gratitude for the Saviour—we are sure of that... But why not provide a material setting for that lovely jewel?... If the jewel is appropriate, the setting is too... Let’s bring the evangelist into the glow of our church Christmas fires, and let him too know the heart-clutching experience of being remembered and loved by the people whom he has served...
