8:30-9:45 Panels

Panel 1: Wesleyans and War
From the American Revolution to the present global war on terrorism, Wesleyan communities have struggled with and often disagreed over how they should respond to wars. Perhaps more than any other topic, war has required Wesleyans to reflect carefully on the intersections of empire, church and the missio Dei. This distinguished panel of Wesleyan scholars will discuss the topic of war from a variety of disciplinary perspectives, including history, ethics, moral theology and philosophy, and pastoral theology.

Panelists:
William J. Abraham, Ph.D. Southern Methodist University
D. Stephen Long, Ph.D., Marquette University
Kirsten Oh, Ph.D. Student, Claremont School of Theology
Andrew Wood, Ph.D., Auburn University

Moderator: Jason Vickers, Ph.D., United Theological Seminary
Respondent: Rev. Christian Kakez-A-Kapend, Pastor, Heart of Africa Fellowship at Lover's Lane United Methodist Church, Dallas, TX

Panel 2: Wesleyan Women and the Missio Dei
Women theologians and justice activists have been central to Wesleyan identities from the beginning, offering vital perspectives on the tensions between empire, church, and the missio Dei. Featuring some of the leading voices in this exciting field of inquiry within Wesleyan studies, this panel will examine the contributions of key Wesleyan women on the intersecting themes of empire, church, missio Dei, including Dorothy Ripley, Mary McLeod Bethune, Phoebe Palmer, Mildred Bangs Wynkoop, and Georgia Harkness.

Panelists:
Elaine A. Heath, Ph.D., Southern Methodist University
Rebecca Miles, Ph.D., Southern Methodist University
Lacey Warner, Ph.D., Duke University
Stan Ingersol, Ph.D., Nazarene Archives

Moderator: JoAnn Shade, D.Min., Salvation Army Kroc Center, Ashland, Ohio
